From Dean Dan

I'm delighted that on Nov. 19, the Nevada Court of Appeals will sit at the UNLV Boyd School of Law. The Court will hear two civil cases that morning inside our Thomas & Mack Moot Court, and afterward the judges will take questions from our students. This is a terrific opportunity for the Boyd community and we are grateful to Chief Judge Michael Gibbons, Judge Abbi Silver, and Judge Jerome Tao for the chance to experience oral arguments firsthand. This is extremely valuable as we train lawyers to be skilled advocates.

The successful efforts to create the Nevada Court of Appeals roughly a year ago was led by Nevada Supreme Court Chief Justice James Hardesty. The Court has already made a significant impact in the Nevada legal system, helping hundreds of cases reach resolution much sooner and providing guidance and decisions in critical areas of case law. It was a great pleasure for me to support the creation of this Court, and it is a thrill to see it in operation, particularly at Boyd. The Court has already hired several Boyd graduates as clerks and we are thankful that they are helping provide this kind of opportunity for our students.

FACULTY SPOTLIGHT: Thomas B. McAffee

As almost every Boyd graduate knows, Thomas B. McAffee is an expert on the Constitution and an advocate for its thoughtful interpretation. One of the founding faculty members at Boyd, he has been teaching in law schools for more than 30 years.

1. What are you working on? I am completing the research and writing of a book I've worked on for almost two years. The tentative title is Mormonism and Marriage Equality: History, Law, and Prospects. It documents the evolving Latter-day Saints (LDS) perspective on homosexuality and gay rights, the change from the 1960s to 2015 being more dramatic than one might imagine. Exemplary is that LDS leaders supported repealing orientation employment discrimination laws in the 1970s, and in 2015 endorsed the Utah anti-discrimination law that was adopted. The book also carefully reviews the role of the church in the 25 years of debate over marriage equality. It is largely addressed to the thoughtful LDS member and leader, ultimately examining the prospects for any further evolution -- but will hopefully be of interest to any thoughtful person.

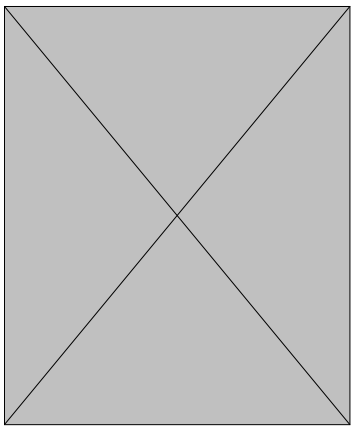
2. Which of your recent articles should I read? I would recommend "Setting Us Up for Disaster: The Supreme Court's Decision in Terry v. Ohio," 12 Nev. L.J. 609 (2012). This is a rare Fourth Amendment article, produced for a symposium issue on "disastrous" Supreme Court opinions. It charmingly explains how the stop and frisk decision that seemed almost expansive in securing Fourth Amendment rights has been construed and applied to contribute immensely to eviscerating the security offered by the Fourth Amendment. Mainly it was fun to write and will be fun to read (not being too long, for example). Read this and it may convince you to take Criminal Procedure: Investigations.

3. How has your research and writing affected your teaching? I'm always astonished that whenever I go to "explain" something to support a scholarly thesis, I discover that there is more to learn -- and to think about -- if I am going to state the underlying ideas in an understandable and convincing fashion. This semester I will teach Lawrence v. Texas, invalidating laws making sodomy a crime, for at least the 10th time. This past year I came to fully appreciate that Lawrence is not really a decision about sex (even adult consensual sex), but is really about relationships -- and in particular the intimate relationship of gay couples. And now I fully perceive the decisive role it played to further our journey on the path to marriage equality this year. So the idea that our legal scholarship can contribute to teaching law is no myth.

STUDENT SPOTLIGHT: Lynell Reyes



1. Tell us about your summer at Switch (a leading data technology company based in Las Vegas)? Prior to law school, I was the Las Vegas marketing representative for Samsung Electronics. My background in technology and goal of becoming corporate counsel piqued my interest in applying to work at Switch. I learned about its Corporate Summer Internship Program through the Career Development Office: I applied, interviewed, and was offered the position. During my summer at Switch, I worked on a variety of topics from property to contracts to regulatory compliance.

2. You have a son. What's he into these days? Kainoa loves knights and Darth Vader. We spend time together pretend jousting and listening to Darth Vader's theme song on repeat during car rides. He also likes to help me highlight entire pages in my casebooks. Kainoa tells his friends that his mommy also goes to school.

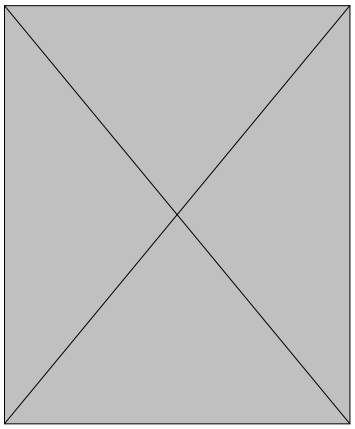
3. You are the Latin Bar Association (LBA) liaison for La Voz, Boyd's Latino student association. Tell us a little about your work with LBA on La Voz's Huellas program. As liaison, I work closely with the LBA to secure attorneys for the Huellas mentorship program that groups a practicing attorney with a law student, an undergraduate student, and a high school student. It's been a fantastic way to network while positively impacting the legal community.

4. What's been your "Wow, that's really cool!" moment in your time at Boyd? I have accepted a summer associate position with Fox Rothschild next year. Between Switch and Fox, the Career Development Office has really prepared me and put me on the right track to pursuing these professional opportunities. I think to myself, "Wow, that's really cool!" My career is taking off and I am so thankful for everyone's help at Boyd in helping make my dreams come true.



ALUMNI SPOTLIGHT: Stephanie Buntin '11

Stephanie Buntin '11 is an intellectual property attorney in the Las Vegas office of Michigan-based firm Howard & Howard Attorneys PLLC. Stephanie's practice focuses on trademark prosecution and patent prosecution for businesses. In addition, Stephanie represents abused and neglected children pro bono with the Children's Attorneys Project through the Legal Aid Center of Southern Nevada.

Stephanie graduated from Vassar College in Poughkeepsie, N.Y. with a degree in biology. During her time at Boyd, Stephanie was an articles editor for the Nevada Law Journal.

She enjoyed Professor Mary LaFrance's intellectual property courses and seminars, which helped prepare her to sit for the patent bar exam to become a registered U.S. Patent Attorney. Stephanie is also grateful to Professors Jean Sternlight and Robert Correales for their mentorship throughout law school.

Stephanie lives in Summerlin with fellow '11 Boyd alumn and family law attorney Ilan Acherman. In their free time, they enjoy traveling, cooking, and binge-watching their favorite television shows.

Dear Mayor Carolyn Goodman,

We represent a group of medical professionals, psychologists and philosophers who, with original and innovative methods, have dedicated for more than 30 years to offer a successful answer to the addiction, existential anguish, pain, violence, suicide, in short, to all the destructive impulses that affect more and more the current Humanity.

Today heroin, opiate addiction and lack of solutions have brought us to this point of an unprecedented war on drugs.

We have obtained surprising results in American patients, with this unique method, which have dared to take the challenge and came to Buenos Aires to carry out their treatment.

Taking into account the success obtained in the fight against those maladies, we want now to develop a humanitarian action to a large scale and for this we need the fundamental help of the Notables like you, who lead Humanity in their different areas.

You are heard by all Humanity. For that reason, we will thank you deeply if you dedicate 30 minutes of your valuable time to us to expose the way in which we are trying to benefit Humanity with these ideas that have already made a difference to a number of people, and we are sure that with your noble help they can make a great difference to all Humanity.

We have attached below the followings links that support our success in treatment for substance abuse.

Thank you so much for listening and for opening your hearts to an altruistic action.

2015 Monopoly Sponsorship Opportunities.pdf

Good Afternoon Mayor Goodman,
I hope that you're well and feeling great this Thursday afternoon!
I'm contacting you, Mayor, because I would appreciate your help! I am in need of registrations for our biggest fundraiser at The Adoption Exchange.
Not only am I personally inviting you to attend our biggest Nevada Fundraiser for The Adoption Exchange. But, would you be willing to help me to spread the word as well?
Our event is on June 27th and it's our Annual Monopoly Tournament; an evening of dinner, silent auction, Monopoly Tournament game play and a whole lot more!
Dave Courvoisier is our emcee for the evening and a committed board member of our non profit organization, Channel 8 will be there for PR as well.
Please see the attachment for detailed sponsorship information. If you are unable to attend, would you consider passing on our event information to your colleagues and friends who might have adoption in their family? www.adoptex.org/monopoly
I shook you hand at the Community Partners Engagement Event a few months ago and I'd love to shake your hand again at our event. ☺
We'd truly enjoy having you participate and I look forward to your reply!
Best,
Jessica

As you know, in Clark County, more than 1100 children are in foster care and hundreds of these children are available for adoption. While they wait, they miss out on the support, tenderness and care of a family that will always be there. They struggle to reach their potential and to help our communities thrive.

The Adoption Exchange is dedicated year-round to helping children in foster-care find safe, loving, and permanent homes. The annual MONOPOLY® Tournament is the signature fundraising event that keeps this organization moving. In 2014 The Adoption Exchange recruited for over 1,292 children nationwide. In Nevada alone, we helped to place 77 children. We're making a big impact here in Nevada everyday.

To help find more homes for more children, we hope that you will partner with The Adoption Exchange with a Silent Auction Donation for The 2015 MONOPOLY® Tournament or a Prize Donation for MONOPOLY® Tournament Game Play.

In Nevada alone, approximately 220 children age out of the foster care system each year. Without the support of an adoptive family, these children exhibit significantly higher rates of school failure, substance abuse, teen pregnancy, crime, and poverty. In fact, 50 percent of youth who emancipate drop out of high school, less than 1 percent go on to college, 20 percent will be homeless within two years, and 30 percent will become involved in drugs and crime (Mary Elsenbach, 2006). The costs to society are high as well. It costs The Adoption Exchange an average of $1,800 to provide basic recruitment services aimed at connecting each of the children it serves with a permanent family. In contrast, it will cost taxpayers and communities an estimated $300,000 in social costs (e.g., incarceration, public assistance, and lost wages) over the lifetime of every youth who emancipates from the foster care system (Source: Jim Casey Youth Opportunities Initiative, 2013). In short… Children who age out of foster care face a life of poverty and hardship.

Your participation in at our event will make a difference in the life of a local waiting child.

Quote of the Day

“Some of these students leave high school sometimes with at least their first semester of college basically done. That’s a huge cost savings for families.”

— Jesse Welsh, assistant superintendent for curriculum and professional development

From the Editors

Nevada’s education rankings have long been dismally low in most areas, but there is a bright spot: our public school students in Advanced Placement classes fare quite well on end-of-course exams when compared to other states.

As Jackie Valley explains, nearly a quarter of Nevada high school graduates scored a 3 or higher on an AP exam in 2017, placing the state 14th overall. Nevada also posted the largest five-year and three-year gain in terms of student performance on the AP exams.

Showing tribute of any kind to a drug addict is the most ridiculous thing your administration has come up with yet. The man was a good artist which he was paid highly for.
This is not someone I want my grandchildren to look up to. He killed himself! With Drugs!! This is how you wish to inspire the youth of our town. Your tribute is encouraging young people to follow in the footsteps of a drug addict!!
How sad you have decided to drag our town down a road of star idol worship instead of doing for and celebrating our military heroes. Shame on you. I am embarrassed for us all. Karleen Craig

Dear Commissioner,

We've met at a previous panel for VIPI and as a member of Veterans in Politics I sometimes come across various situations that may be beyond my comfort zone. Yesterday was one such example; I have a friend who lives in your area at [redacted]. Her name is Nancy Spilotro. Nancy is an elderly lady of 76 years of age, she has a son named Vincent who now resides with her although he is seldom there. Now, Nancy has a fairly famous name in this town, chiefly behind the activities her late husband is rumored to have been part of. That being said, no one deserves to be living in the conditions that she now survives through.

On Sunday, I went to check on her and it was bad, extremely bad. I've been wanting to get Nancy into a program for quite sometime now, but she believed her son would make everything okay. That didn't happen. To describe the situation is difficult, I am not ashamed to say that is is so bad that I actually shed a tear when I got home...There is dog, cat feces and urine everywhere in the house. No flush handle on the toilet, not a clean dish in site, no faucet handle on the kitchen sink no gas a stove with one dial and one working burner if the gas was on. etc.. etc.. etc.. As the lady from the fire dept said today she can smell it from the front door she doesn't need to see.

Nancy asked to be taken to hospital today so I called ambulance she was having chest pain...She is now at Sunrise and I'm looking to get her into some type of assisted living program. It would be horrific in my eyes to allow this lady to go back into this environment. The other parts of the abuse she's suffering deals with her SS benefits and prescription drugs that her son seems to be taking from her. She mentioned that him and his wife have both put hands on her in the past. I find this absolutely unacceptable and I hope you do to...

As a bit of a side note, I had gone to check on her because I mentioned her to the Mayor on Sat. and she told me to have her call her. I had no idea things had gotten this bad or I would have mentioned this to Mayor Goodman. I write you on directions from Steve Sanson based on her being a resident in your area. Can you help???

How Prison Factories Pluck Jobs From The US Economy

U.S. apparel manufacturers face major competition from the U.S. prison system, where inmates produce clothing and footwear for military personnel. While it is illegal to import prison-made apparel, it is legal to make it in the U.S. This not only undermines American industry, but also raises 13th Amendment questions, says Rick Helfenbein of the American Apparel & Footwear Association. By way of information to you both:

Until the legal/justice process is completed and a guilty verdict is assessed, the question at this time is moot. As you know, anyone can be indicted for any reason, and most importantly, one is presumed innocent until proven guilty in this country. As for additional information In regards to campaign contributions that came in over 4 years ago to fund my 2011 campaign (and were spent), each and all were recorded, made public and to my knowledge were either Nevada, Clark County, and/or City licensed business entities.

Hi Mayor! Two years ago (yes he kept the email!) Jon Ralston asked us about this whether you were considering returning the money he gave your campaign, and after talking with you we responded you were aware of the issue and would wait and see what the outcome of the investigation is,
Now that he has been indicted Jon wants to know whether you are planning to return the money he donated to your campaign.
Feel free to call me if you want to chat, I wanted to email you this so you had the PDF.

INVESTMENT COMPANY EXECUTIVES INDICTED FOR $1.5 BILLION

PONZI SCHEME

WASHINGTON – The president and chief executive officer and two former Asia-based executives of a Las Vegas investment company were indicted today for their roles in an alleged $1.5 billion Ponzi scheme.

Assistant Attorney General Leslie R. Caldwell of the Justice Department's Criminal Division, U.S. Attorney Daniel G. Bogden of the District of Nevada and Special Agent in Charge Laura A. Bucheit of the FBI's Las Vegas Division made the announcement.

"The defendants allegedly preyed on thousands of unsuspecting Japanese victims to enrich themselves by operating a billion-plus dollar Ponzi scheme," said Assistant Attorney General Caldwell. "This prosecution shows that the Criminal Division will pursue not only those who victimize American citizens, but also those who use the U.S. as a home base to defraud victims abroad."

"Investment fraud and other financial fraud cases are a high priority for the U.S. Attorney's Office in Nevada," said U.S. Attorney Bogden. "These defendants are accused of using a Nevada corporation to conduct their $1.5 billion fraud scheme and falsely telling thousands of overseas victims that their investments would be safely held and managed by an independent, third-party escrow agent in Nevada. Fraudulent ruses and schemes perpetrated by Nevadans using Nevada corporations and entities will continue to be addressed by this office."

"These indictments are a reminder of the FBI's determination to identify, investigate and bring to justice those who are committing financial crimes against innocent consumers," said Special Agent in Charge Bucheit. "We are appreciative of the continued support we receive from our international, federal, state and local law enforcement partners."

Edwin Fujinaga, 68, of Las Vegas; Junzo Suzuki, 66, of Tokyo; and Paul Suzuki, 36, of Tokyo, were charged in an indictment with eight counts of mail fraud and nine counts of wire fraud. Fujinaga also is charged with three counts of money laundering. The indictment seeks from all three defendants forfeiture of the proceeds from the alleged crimes.

Fujinaga was the president and CEO of Las Vegas-based MRI International Inc. (MRI). Junzo Suzuki previously was MRI's executive vice president for Asia Pacific, and Paul Suzuki previously was the company's general manager for Japan operations. MRI purportedly specialized in "factoring," whereby the company purchased accounts receivable from medical providers at a discount, and then attempted to recover the entire amount, or at least more than the discounted amount, from the debtor.

According to allegations in the indictment, from at least 2009 to 2013, Fujinaga and the Suzukis fraudulently solicited investments from thousands of Japanese residents, and MRI currently owes investors over $1.5 billion. Specifically, the indictment alleges that Fujinaga and the Suzukis promised investors a series of interest payments that would accrue over the life of the investment and that would be paid out along with the face value of the investment at the conclusion of the investments' duration. The defendants allegedly solicited investments by, among other things, promising investors that their investments would be used only for the purchase of medical accounts receivable (MARS) and by representing that investors funds would be managed and safeguarded by an independent third-party escrow company.

The indictment further alleges that MRI operated as a Ponzi scheme, wherein the defendants used new investors' money to pay prior investors' maturing investments. According to the indictment, the defendants also allegedly used investors' funds for purposes other than the purchase of MARS, including paying themselves sales commissions, subsidizing gambling habits, funding personal travel by private jet, and other personal expenses.

The charges contained in an indictment are merely accusations. A defendant is presumed innocent until and unless proven guilty.

This case is being investigated by the FBI's Las Vegas Division. Significant assistance was provided by the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission, the Criminal Division's Office of International Affairs and Japanese authorities. This case is being prosecuted by Assistant Chief Albert B. Stieglitz Jr. and Trial Attorney Melissa Aoyagi of the Criminal Division's Fraud Section and First Assistant U.S. Attorney Steven W. Myhre of the District of Nevada.

BREAKING NEWS…

Dean Atkinson and UNLV leadership scheduled to travel to Carson City this week to speak before a legislative budget committee.

Graduate Medical Education Department granted "continued accreditation" by Accreditation Council for Graduate Medical Education. GME had previously received "initial accreditation."

Two former resident physicians will return to the UNLV SOM. Dr. Joshua Goldman and Dr. Ashley Pistorio will join the plastic surgery department. Both surgeons left Las Vegas after completing residencies to get specialty fellowship training, but are returning to become faculty physicians with UNLV School of Medicine.

MAKING THE ROUNDS WITH FOUNDING DEAN BARBARA ATKINSON

Issue 179 – Jan 22nd, 2019

If a child has a recurring or persistent disease caused by an infectious agent such as those caused by bacteria, viruses, fungi and parasites, a pediatric infectious diseases specialist has the training to understand the unique signs and symptoms of even the most complex infectious diseases in children. At the UNLV School of Medicine and our clinical arm, UNLV Medicine, we are honored to have Dr. David Di John in this very important role. Prior to his arrival in Southern Nevada in 2014, he taught clinical pediatrics for 18 years at New York University Medical center, served as director of pediatric infectious diseases at New York's Flushing Hospital Medical Center and directed a pediatric AIDS clinic in New York City. I'm sure you'll enjoy learning more about this man, whose vast experience and calm demeanor provide an extra measure of comfort to the people he treats.

Dr. David Di John: Passionate About Serving the Underserved

Born and raised in New York City, Dr. David Di John is now one of the leading physicians in Nevada when it comes to treating children with infectious diseases including HIV

The son of a physician who worked at a VA medical center in New York City, David Di John listened carefully to what his father told him about his work, about how through the practice of medicine he was able to help the men and women who, often at great personal sacrifice, had served their country.

While Di John was immersed in the sciences at New York's Stuyvesant High School -- the school specializing in science, mathematics and technology has been seen as a symbol of excellence in public education for more than a century -- his father's observations gave a sense of direction to the idealistic young man who wanted to become a contributor, a builder, a genuine worker on behalf of humanity.

"With the help of my father and teachers, I could see how the sciences, how medicine afforded an opportunity to better people's lives," said Di John, who's now been a physician for 37 years.

He did his undergraduate work in pre-med at Columbia, the Ivy League school in Manhattan where former President Barack Obama also earned a bachelor's degree. It was at Columbia that Di John's commitment to public service became pronounced. He headed a community service council that worked with students from humble backgrounds.

"We went into their households to work with them," Dr. Di John said. "We got to know their families. What I tried to do with kids is show them what was possible in a great city, what could have an impact on them educationally. We would bring them around campus, took them to important places like museums that they had never been to. One time we took them to the Brooklyn Navy Yard where they boarded a submarine and were able to speak with the crew. They might have been from Harlem but they had never even been to Brooklyn or Queens, never ventured out of their own neighborhoods. I wanted to expand their horizons."

That community work with young people, coupled with the fact that he enjoyed his pediatric rotations the most while at the George Washington School of Medicine in the nation's capital, pushed him to specialize in pediatrics. During medical school, he had the opportunity to go overseas, to the west African nation of Gambia, to learn about tropical medicine. He saw patients with malaria and leprosy, and rural hospitals that were so crowded that children had to lie on blankets on the floor. Once he worked with a lethargic boy who had been left to die. "I was able to diagnose him with meningococcal meningitis and started treatment but I had to leave before I found out whether he lived or not," Dr. Di John recalled. "The inadequacy of care was obvious."

> "You would see heartbreaking things -- a child who once was speaking and walking would become unable to talk or walk and be in a wheelchair or completely bedridden before they died."

The work with infectious diseases while in medical school propelled Di John to pursue a fellowship in pediatric infectious diseases through the University of Maryland. In addition to learning how to treat immune deficiency diseases, he was trained to diagnose and administer appropriate treatment to youngsters who have viral, bacterial or fungal infections.

He also was trained to work with diseases that were complicated or atypical, including: illnesses that are of unclear cause, have prolonged fever, or are recurrent; respiratory infections; bone and joint infections; tuberculosis; acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS); hepatitis, and meningitis.

During his fellowship, Di John thought seriously about working in international medicine, possibly working for the World Health Organization. At one point, while working with indigenous Indians in Venezuela, he was part of an effort to develop a malaria vaccine.

As it turned out, particularly with the explosion of the AIDS epidemic in the 1980s and 1990s, there was plenty for a new pediatric infectious diseases specialist to do in the United States.

He returned to his hometown of New York City, becoming highly regarded not only as a clinician but as an academic for nearly 20 years. His research, often dealing with HIV, the virus that can lead to AIDS, was published in numerous peer-reviewed journals, including Pediatric Infectious Disease Journal, Journal of Pediatrics, and Clinical Pediatrics.

In the early days of the AIDS epidemic, Di John said there were many instances of mother-to-child transmission of HIV, which led to children dying young. “You would see heartbreaking things -- a child who once was speaking and walking would become unable to talk or walk and be in a wheelchair or completely bedridden before they died.”

Seeing that loss of milestones in a child, Di John said, took a toll on him and his team. “It was a very difficult thing to see, when you couldn’t really treat them,” he said.”There wasn’t much to offer those patients back then.”

Fortunately, Di John said, with the passage of time “there has been explosion of new drugs” to deal with HIV/AIDS. “Some years ago, I treated a girl in New York who had been infected at birth with HIV, who later had a baby of her own who was not infected. While now much more common, that was quite remarkable when I first saw it.”

In 2014, in pursuit of a new opportunity -- “there was talk then of the opening of a new medical school in Las Vegas” -- Di John moved to Nevada, becoming the section chief of pediatric Infectious diseases with the University of Nevada Reno School of Medicine. In 2017 he took the same position with the new UNLV School of Medicine and later that year, when the need arose for new leadership, he became the program director for the UNLV Medicine Maternal Child Wellness Program, which is charged with caring for HIV infected and exposed infants, children and adolescents in southern Nevada.

“We’ve come a long way in treating pediatric infectious diseases,” said Dr. Di John, who enjoys teaching pediatric residents. “I’m excited to see what the future will bring to help even more children.”

Subject: RE: Fireworks!

Dear Ms. Gurley:
You have one who for a long, long, long time commiserates with you-- though you think you are just one and only with the problem…Having lived in our neighborhood for 40+ years and also being the lucky owners of generations of pets who continue to hide in closets, under furniture, dig into the wee-est of holes, we too have suffered through the setting off of fireworks at weirdest times, days, hours. They have come either from our neighborhood, adjacent neighborhoods and even set off by traveling vehicles. All except the fewest ARE illegal and try though we have to get them stopped, one at a time or groups of them, new people replace previous occupants, and kids forever joyride through the streets nearby or in hearing range. Solutions? Just what you have done, for there is little else unless you have the specific address of the persons that can be cited and penalized.
Any ideas would be welcomed!
[those who don't set off all they've purchased for the 4th by the 4th will continue to do so on the 5th as well --- or so is our experience]

Subject: Fireworks!

Happy Fourth of July! Last night, Friday, June 23rd, the fireworks started around 5:00pm. I left my house for about 2 hours and when I returned, the "booms" continued. I finally called the non emergency police number around 9:00 pm to report the fireworks. The dispatcher informed me that they had already received a call about the area I mentioned and a patrol car had been sent out. She also told me that they hate this time of the year for this very reason. She even thanked me for my efforts to try and get this nonsense stopped. I had to give my little dog drugs last night and because of his trembling and barking, I got very little sleep. Today I have to teach private music lessons. I don't have the luxury of sleeping all day like those who were shooting off the fireworks do, no doubt.
We have over a week before the actual 4th celebration. I'm already exhausted. This will continue throughout the week because I am quite sure Las Vegas doesn't have the necessary police officers to patrol these neighborhoods for idiots who can't curb their enthusiasm for using these illegal fireworks in our city neighborhoods. A ban should be implemented on ALL fireworks in neighborhoods. But because you say you cannot do that, your police force will be answering calls all week from residents who, like me, just want to live in peace. We are the ones who work and pay taxes.
I wish I could redirect these fireworks to your neighborhood so you could experience what others have to endure. Maybe after a few sleepless nights you might find the motivation to ban fireworks in all city neighborhoods!
Respectfully,
Barbara Gurley

Penn State Study: Teen Cyberbullies Often Target Friends, Former Dating Partners

Friends or former romantic partners, rather than strangers, are most often the source of online harassment, threats, and aggression known as cyberbullying, according to a recent Penn State study. Researchers found that it is seven times more likely for young people to be victimized by a current or former friend or by someone they have previously dated than by outsiders. "The large magnitude of the effects of close relationships on the likelihood of cyberbullying, even after controlling for many other factors, was particularly surprising," said lead author Diane Felmlee.

Book titled: Good Guys - Russian and American mob gasoline and oil pricing wars in the United States.

From my email archives February 23, 2015 11:10am.

Fritz,

I just asked my roommate if he thought the corruption was worse in America or in Russia.

His immediate answer was: Russia!

It's a man's world. I wouldn't understand all of this violence that takes place out on the streets and in the world other than what I have had to use defending myself with my own intuition.

On Monday, February 23, 2015 11:10 AM, Heidi Meyer [redacted] wrote:

Fritz,

My opinion for whatever it is worth is that the corruption in America is still far worse than in Russia.

I was looking up a book that I read many years ago that was written by Bill Bonanno and Donny Brasco detailing "the life" and surveillance of The American mafia and their war with the Russian mob on American turf.

I always referred to this aspect of mafia wars as "They came, they saw." Very very brutal underground wars and the mafia wars regarding gasoline pricing. This is another whole added aspect of gasoline and oil pricing that is handed down to the mobs. The book is the "Good Guys" mostly fiction of course.

Look at his hand gesture, it's the same hand gesture as Bill Clinton in my previous research that you didn't receive. Is this indicating the gun trafficking? Wow, look at the expression on the man's face sitting below Lieberman.

Let me piece meal from that research to you the Bill Clinton - Arkansas/Barack Obama gun running to Benghazi websites and speeches to see if that will go through. The email I sent to you early this morning, I had to try twice before it actually was sent. There's some type of block for some reason to you and some others who are researchers, including local military that my research involving certain subjects is being blocked in sending to those email addresses.

I just tried to retrieve it from my sent emails and the screen completely freezes up. I'll try again later.

P.S. I corresponded with Mike Duke for a couple of years.

He was CEO of Walmart for approximately 10 years. I was told that he was interested and was "hands on" in the Walmart Stores. He was later squeezed out by the young suit and ties and it was reported that he didn't get his 2 million dollar retirement severance pay either.

I was forced out at the Clearlake, Lake County, Walmart. Travis Peck is still the store manager there. Clearlake Walmart came up as a Walmart in the associated search for gun running. Wouldn't surprise me at all or the interest in the Heidi Meyer Puerto Rico account for money laundering. The only difference is, this time I'm not the pawn.

Subject: Inquiry about Mayor Goodman speaking at CAT meeting- 11/06/2017

Hello,

My name is Afton Martinez and I am a Forensic Scientist in the Toxicology section of the City of Henderson Police Department Forensic Laboratory. We, along with the Las Vegas Metro Police Department Forensic Toxicology Laboratory, have volunteered to host the Fall 2017 California Association of Toxicologists meeting (http://www.cal-tox.org/Next_Cat_Meeting.htm). The meeting is being held November 6-7, 2017 at the Golden Nugget and brings professionals in the Forensic Alcohol and Forensic Toxicology fields together. These meetings are used to share research, brainstorm ideas to improve the practice and elevate standards, share new drug information and share case studies.

If able, we would love to have Mayor Goodman speak to our guests on Monday, November 6, 2017 at 8:15am. We are hoping for a brief speech, about five minutes, welcoming our guests to Las Vegas and anything regarding driving under the influence of alcohol and/or drugs would be perfectly geared to our audience. We are expecting approximately 50-70 attendees that include toxicologists from our neighboring states California and Arizona but also others as far away as New York.

If you need more information, or have questions, please do not hesitate to contact me.

I look forward to hearing from you,
Afton Martinez

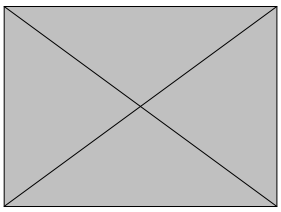
New Products and Coverage

Alerting you to changes in the ever-moving industrial marketplace

Industrial Info Resources is pleased to announce that we have expanded our geographical and unit asset coverage in some of our core industries. We continue enhancing our coverage to provide you with the timely and accurate market intelligence that you've come to expect from us.



Pharmaceutical & Biotech Industry European Coverage

To reflect the global reach of today's Pharmaceutical-Biotech Industry, Industrial Info has launched our European coverage, which includes projects valued at more than $9.5 billion for both product development and manufacturing.

As with our North American coverage of the sector, European coverage will include traditional pharmaceuticals (branded, generic and over-the-counter), biological (cell-based) drugs, diagnostic substances, active pharmaceutical ingredients (APIs), and nutritional supplements. The burgeoning medical device market and major laboratories will be included as well.

Oil & Gas Sector - Opportunities During Downturn

Despite low oil & gas prices, Industrial Info continues to track more than 11,000 projects valued at $2.39 trillion in the Oil & Gas Production, Terminals and Pipelines industries, including more than $570 billion in offshore projects. While offshore oil and gas development continues in certain regions, the decommissioning of offshore platforms also accounts for several hundred million dollars of potential project activity.

Global Food & Beverage Database

Industrial Info's coverage of the Food & Beverage Industry now spans all corners of the globe, accounting for more than $72 billion in project coverage. We now cover all Food & Beverage segments in Latin America, Asia and Oceania, and continue expanding our coverage in Europe.

Food & Beverage Coverage by Geography:

- Africa: $485 million
- Asia: $9.88 billion
- Central & South America: $13.81 billion
- Europe: $1.43 billion
- North America: $42.24 billion
- Oceania: $4.19 billion

Natural Gas Liquids (NGL) Database

Industrial Info's NGL Database offers users a wealth of information on the rapidly expanding natural gas liquids (NGL) sector, providing timely intelligence about NGL projects from their planning phases through construction, including equipment needs, contractors, and key project contacts. Future offline events (planned turnarounds) are tracked as well. In addition to the database, IIR Energy's NGLs Live provides continuous updates on the status of this closely watched market. Clients will have access to hands-on knowledge of plant and unit operations, outages, new capacity, and planned and unplanned turnarounds.

IIR's NGL Database offers full plant, unit and ownership details on NGL assets for:

- Ethane, propane and butane
- Condensate splitters
- Ethylene and propylene
- Fractionators and gas processing
- LPG and natural gasoline
- Pipelines and storage
- Import and export facilities

DIVERSITY SNAPSHOT

The Best Firms For Minority Attorneys

While U.S. law firms have long vowed to make their ranks more diverse and inclusive, the industry has long failed to deliver on those promises. Here are the firms making some headway, according to this year's Diversity Snapshot. Read more »

Law360's Diversity Snapshot: By The Numbers

Efforts to increase diversity have again yielded few meaningful changes in law firm demographics, according to Law360's annual headcount survey, even as law schools continue to enroll students of color in increasing numbers. Read more »

Minority Lawyers On Why They Left BigLaw

Despite the proliferation of diversity committees and inclusion initiatives, corporate law firms remain overwhelmingly white and male, especially at leadership levels. Here, minority attorneys discuss their reasons for leaving a large firm. Read more »

Taking On The 'Petri Dish' Of BigLaw Bias

The often-informal processes for deciding matters like compensation at law firms can create, as one expert put it, a "petri dish" for the effects of unconscious bias. Here's how some firms are looking to shake up the system. Read more »

EPA Cost-Benefit Review Signals Big Concessions To Industry

The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency recently said it is considering altering its approach to regulatory cost-benefit analyses to reflect industry groups' concerns that the process is weighted against them, something experts say would be tough to implement as a one-size-fits-all rule and would surely invite legal challenges from environmental and other public interest groups. This summit will serve as an educational opportunity for professionals who work in the area of substance use and addiction, while issuing a "call to action" to participants resulting in successful inter-agency/inter-sector collaborations.

The summit will take place on Friday, September 29, 2017 from 8:00 a.m. – 4:00 p.m. The Mayor is being asked to speak from 8:40 a.m. – 8:55 a.m. (DRAFT Summit Schedule attached.) The Summit will be held at the UNLV Student Union Ballroom located at 4505 S. Maryland Parkway, Las Vegas, NV 89154.

OBJECTIVE

The planning committee for this summit seeks to increase professional competencies in addressing substance use through education on prevention, intervention, and service delivery strategies. The goals of the Substance Use Summit are to:

1. Build capacity by informing our community about the latest Southern Nevada resources available in diversion, treatment, and recovery.
2. Foster opportunities for collaboration and partnership.
3. Reduce stigma and increase understanding about the nature of addiction and recovery.

Substance Use & Behavioral Health Summit (Key Talking Points)

- In 2012, the city of Las Vegas coordinated with over 120 faith leaders, representing over 70,000 local congregants, initiating Las Vegas Mayor's Faith Initiative to address seven topics confronting our community: Strengthening the Family, Education, Homelessness, Human Trafficking, Community Unity, and Addictions- the subject mentioned as the most troubling to our community.
- Developed under The Las Vegas Mayor's Faith Initiative (LVMFI), our Addictions Workgroup offers our community a safe place for honest and open dialogue coordinating strategies to address substance use disorder, and community collaboration.
- Nevada has the second highest rate of Substance Use Disorders (SUD) in the nation (SAMHSA, 2013) but has the lowest number of providers able to treat SUD per 1,000 people (Advocates for Human Potential, 2014).
- "The number of psychiatrists, psychologists, counselors and social workers available to treat every 1,000 people with SUD – ranges from a high of 70 in Vermont to a low of 11 in Nevada.

- Nationally, the average is 32 behavioral health specialists for every 1,000 people afflicted with the disorder (Advocates for Human Potential, 2014).”
- An annual average of 233,000 persons aged 12 or older have used illicit drugs in the past year in the Las Vegas-Paradise Metropolitan Statistical Area (16.8% of the population), and 138,000 persons aged 12 or older were classified as having a substance use disorder in the past year (9.9% of the population) according to the National Survey on Drug Use and Health (SAMHSA Report, 2012).
- According to a 2017 fact sheet released by the Southern Nevada Health District, since 2008, more Clark County residents have died each year from opioid overdoses than firearms or motor vehicle traffic accidents.
- In 2012-2014, the mortality rate from opioid overdoses in Clark County was almost 70% higher than the national rate.
- It is only through Capacity Building and Strategic Partnerships that we will be able to make a difference and save lives.
- So thank you for being here and thank you for all that you do to address this deadly epidemic by building recovery-focused partnerships and providing tools, resources and training to support prevention, treatment, and recovery.

YOUR ROLE

Mayor Carolyn G. Goodman is being requested to provide the Opening Remarks for the Summit at 8:40 a.m. and has been allotted fifteen minutes to speak to the audience. Key talking points are attached above.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Thank the Summit Partners as follows:

- University of Nevada, Las Vegas - Southern Nevada Addictive Disorders Training Project (Stephanie Borene)
- University of Nevada, Las Vegas – Mental and Behavioral Health Coalition (Sara Hunt)
- Las Vegas Metropolitan Police Department (William Scott, Ailee Burnett)
- Southern Nevada Health District (Jessica Johnson)
- PACT Coalition (Jamie Ross, Novlette Mack)
- Bridge Counseling (Cynthia Mota)
- Mayor’s Faith Initiative (Nyla Christian)

AUDIENCE

The summit will be free of charge and open to anyone who wishes to attend, however, the target audience for the Summit includes health and behavioral health professionals, criminal justice professionals, prevention professionals, and students. Approximately 200 attendees are expected to attend.

Louisiana's Judicial Crisis

The Western District of Louisiana is supposed to have seven district judges. But for a year, most of the courthouses were operating without a single Article III judge. As usual, magistrate judges picked up the slack. (This article is part of a series on the lack of new judgeships in the federal judiciary).

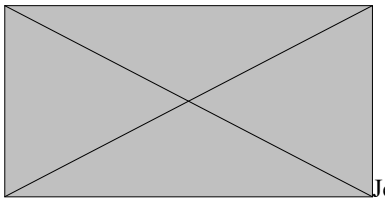
Will Sessions Renew the War on Drugs?



Jeff Sessions' first actions as attorney general indicate the Justice Department will aggressively prosecute violent crime and may return to outdated drug war policies, reversing Obama-era initiatives that focused fewer resources on non-violent drug crimes. Experts are worried Sessions' approach could resurrect ineffective, wasteful practices and increase unnecessary incarceration.

Sessions outlined his vision for the Justice Department in a memo to federal prosecutors earlier this month, where he asked them to work with federal, state, and local law enforcement to identify individuals committing violent crime in their area and levy "immediate and appropriate" punishments. In prepared remarks to law enforcement officers last week in Richmond, Virginia, he noted combating the "scourge of drugs" would be a top priority.

Focusing on violent offenders is necessary, but focusing on drug crimes does not make us safer, said Inimai Chettiar.

"This was a major factor in making the United States the world's number one jailer, and we should not repeat the mistakes of the past," she said.

Both Sessions and President Trump have pointed to rising crime rates as a main factor behind the administration's 'tough on crime' approach. However, a Brennan Center analysis of 2016 numbers in America's 30 largest cities found that overall crime rates remain near historic lows. The murder rate increased, but the 2016 spike was caused largely by Chicago.

Read more in the Wall Street Journal, Financial Times, and Associated Press.

Trump's First Speech to Congress Repeats Falsehoods on Crime

President Donald Trump addressed a joint session of Congress late last month and painted a bleak and inaccurate picture of an America where drugs "pour in at a now unprecedented rate" and "criminal cartels have spread across our nation," creating "an environment of lawless chaos."

Inimai Chettiar and Ames Grawert said his rhetoric doesn't "square with reality" in a piece for the Washington Post.

"Despite Trump's bluster, [ ] crime in the United States actually remains at or near historic lows," they wrote. "The president continues to dish out alternative facts on crime to justify a reactionary agenda. From a wall along the border with Mexico, to a revised 'travel ban' on Muslims, to a likely crackdown on drug users, Trump needs to distort the truth to feed these policies to the American people."

Chettiar and Grawert point out that last year, the overall crime rate fell for the 14th year in a row. Crime rates stand near the bottom of a quarter-century downward trend (violent crime graph, below). And places President Trump rightly points out as having problematic murder rates, like Chicago, are extreme outliers compared to the rest of the country.

"Flashy proposals such as walls and travel bans may play well at rallies, and overwrought rhetoric about crime certainly grabs headlines," they wrote. "But the real work of 'making America safe again' calls for a little less bombast, and a lot more focused action."

Grawert also discussed the downward trend in crime rates on NPR.

Obama White House Official Joins Center's Economic Advisory Board

Dr. Jason Furman (left), former chairman of President Barack Obama's Council of Economic Advisers, has joined the Brennan Center's Economic Advisory Board, a group of renowned economists from across the political spectrum who support the Center's data-driven approach to ending mass incarceration.

Furman is currently a senior fellow at the Peterson Institute for International Economics. He spearheaded a 2016 report from the Council that examined the costs of mass incarceration and provided recommendations for reform. It was released at an event at the White House that same year with the Brennan Center, American Enterprise Institute, Third Point CEO Daniel Loeb, and others.

Other Brennan Center Advisory Board Members include Dr. Lawrence Summers, former Treasury Secretary; Dr. Joseph Stiglitz, former CEA Chairman; Dr. Peter Orszag, former director of the Office of Management and Budget; and Dr. Douglas Holtz-Eakin, former chief economist for President George W. Bush.

Applying economic principles to study mass incarceration and the criminal justice system is becoming more frequent in the field. Brennan Center Economics Fellow Matthew Friedman moderated a panel earlier this year at the Allied Social Science Association conference, the world's largest gathering of economists. In a blog post about the event, he noted that a decade ago, not a single paper, panel, or poster at the conference touched on the issue.

Research Roundup

• The Prison Policy Initiative released an updated version of its pie chart of America's prison system. It looks at the total number of people behind bars in America (2.3 million), and breaks down what type of facility they're being held in and what crime put them there. Among other things, the organization found that 1 in 5 people behind bars are incarcerated for a drug offense.

• A Zogby Analytics/RTI International public opinion poll found that 62 percent of Americans believe treatment and rehabilitation is the best response to non-violent offenses, as opposed to punishment or incapacitation through incarceration. That number jumps to 74 percent if the individual who committed the non-violent offense suffers from mental illness.

• A report by the Prisoner Reentry Institute at John Jay College of Criminal Justice found that while the number of women in the justice system has grown by more than 700 percent from 1980 to 2014, women have not benefited from criminal justice reform to the same extent as men. Researchers looked specifically at what role gender plays in the New York City criminal justice system, recommending reforms that would reduce the number of people arrested, use the lease restrictive pretrial conditions, give women access to social services throughout their involvement with the justice system, and more.

"With 143 days since the manufacturer reports were due on April 1, each company that has yet to submit a report is facing a fine of up to $715,000."

— A sentence in our lead story today

From the Editors

The Nevada Department of Health and Human Services is getting set to levy about $20 million in fines on more than two dozen drug makers that have yet to submit cost and profit reports as required by a 2017 law intended to examine the rapidly rising costs of diabetes drugs. In letters sent this week, the department reiterated that all manufacturers of drugs essential to the treatment of diabetes must submit annual reports to the state, and that non-compliers can be assessed a fine of up to $5,000. Megan Messerly explains.

ICYMI, Changes Are Nigh

We are about to migrate all member and reader email address to MailChimp from Constant Contact for the purpose of using MailChimp to send future newsletters and event invitations. You should not notice any change, other than seeing the MailChimp logo at the bottom of Indy emails.

We also are making some improvements to our membership programs and donation and recurring payment options, in part because of member feedback. And because we love you. We'll be announcing the changes sometime in September — and will also be holding two member briefings to talk about where we've been, where we are, and where we hope to go, with your help. (One will be in Reno, and one will be in Las Vegas. Stay tuned for more.)

Subject: A Utah solution for health care

View this email in your browser

Dear Friend:

A long-sought action from the federal government to let Utah offer Medicaid health insurance to the poor, the homeless and those battling drug addiction has come through.

The Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services in Washington D.C. granted the state's request for a waiver to provide $100 million in Medicaid funding for thousands of poor Utahns to receive health care.

In 2016, the Utah Legislature passed a bill that would give coverage to several groups not previously eligible for Medicaid, including the chronically homeless, low-income families with children and individuals addicted to drugs who are in the criminal justice system—approximately 10,000 Utahns.

Today's announcement on the waiver will immediately provide money to expand the number of residential treatment beds for individuals arrested through Operation Rio Grande. A total of 240 new treatment beds will come online by early next year. Treatment as an alternative to jail will ease jail overcrowding and offer a way out for people trapped in a revolving door of crime, arrest, court, and release back onto the streets. It will also help reduce victims of crime and lessen the burden on first responders and hospital emergency rooms.

My responsibility as mayor is to help keep the public safe and allocate precious tax dollars on those programs and services that deliver results. Our partnership with Governor Herbert, members of the Utah legislature, Salt Lake City and others has produced a critical win for everyone I represent in Salt Lake County. I'm proud of our ability to make progress on challenges we face with homelessness, opioid addiction and access to health care.

Sincerely,

Ben McAdams
Salt Lake County Mayor

Prescription Drug Fair Pricing Act: A coalition in Maryland has developed the strongest state prescription drug pricing legislation in the nation. It's divided into two bills, one that prohibits price gouging and another that requires transparency for expensive drugs. At this link, you can also see a terrific 12-page fact sheet written by the Maryland advocates.

Resolution strategy for policy advocates: Progressive policy campaigns usually need to broaden their coalitions and deepen their base of volunteer activists. There is a straightforward strategy to accomplish that which has worked repeatedly but is little known outside the State of Maryland. It's a Resolution Strategy and it's described on IdeaLog, our blog intended to raise eyebrows and engage minds.

How to persuade in an era of hate speech and fake news: Wednesday, February 22 at 3pm Eastern, 2pm Central, 1pm Mountain, Noon Pacific. (What a way to celebrate George Washington's 285th birthday!) This is a fresh look at what is driving and motivating the radical right, how that is affecting persuadable voters and the progressive base, and what it means for message framing on any issue. This is a moving target so please come share your own ideas. To register, click here.

Interactive map of efforts to roll back mandatory minimum sentencing laws: The Trump Administration is already lying about the crime rate to push for more authoritarian law enforcement as well as harsher criminal penalties. Push back by targeting your state's mandatory minimum sentencing laws. This state map from FAMM allows you to click on your state and see what's going on.

Anti-Trump wave lifts and worries Democrats: Read this Boston Globe story and please think about it. The progressive base is way out ahead of average Democratic officeholders. As political leaders, it is in your interest to stand with the base, even if all you can do is introduce resolutions and participate in demonstrations.

PLI's Repro Rights Report: Our new Repro Rights Report describes and hyperlinks to proactive abortion rights legislation that has been introduced so far in 19 states, as well as links to news clippings about each state effort and PLI's nationwide "Roe Campaign."

Hi Mayor! Two years ago (yes he kept the email!) Jon Ralston asked us about this whether you were considering returning the money he gave your campaign, and after talking with you we responded you were aware of the issue and would wait and see what the outcome of the investigation is,
Now that he has been indicted Jon wants to know whether you are planning to return the money he donated to your campaign.
Feel free to call me if you want to chat, I wanted to email you this so you had the PDF.

INVESTMENT COMPANY EXECUTIVES INDICTED FOR $1.5 BILLION PONZI SCHEME

WASHINGTON – The president and chief executive officer and two former Asia-based executives of a Las Vegas investment company were indicted today for their roles in an alleged $1.5 billion Ponzi scheme.

Assistant Attorney General Leslie R. Caldwell of the Justice Department's Criminal Division, U.S. Attorney Daniel G. Bogden of the District of Nevada and Special Agent in Charge Laura A. Bucheit of the FBI's Las Vegas Division made the announcement.

"The defendants allegedly preyed on thousands of unsuspecting Japanese victims to enrich themselves by operating a billion-plus dollar Ponzi scheme," said Assistant Attorney General Caldwell. "This prosecution shows that the Criminal Division will pursue not only those who victimize American citizens, but also those who use the U.S. as a home base to defraud victims abroad."

"Investment fraud and other financial fraud cases are a high priority for the U.S. Attorney's Office in Nevada," said U.S. Attorney Bogden. "These defendants are accused of using a Nevada corporation to conduct their $1.5 billion fraud scheme and falsely telling thousands of overseas victims that their investments would be safely held and managed by an independent, third-party escrow agent in Nevada. Fraudulent ruses and schemes perpetrated by Nevadans using Nevada corporations and entities will continue to be addressed by this office."

"These indictments are a reminder of the FBI's determination to identify, investigate and bring to justice those who are committing financial crimes against innocent consumers," said Special Agent in Charge Bucheit. "We are appreciative of the continued support we receive from our international, federal, state and local law enforcement partners."

Edwin Fujinaga, 68, of Las Vegas; Junzo Suzuki, 66, of Tokyo; and Paul Suzuki, 36, of Tokyo, were charged in an indictment with eight counts of mail fraud and nine counts of wire fraud. Fujinaga also is charged with three counts of money laundering. The indictment seeks from all three defendants forfeiture of the proceeds from the alleged crimes.

Fujinaga was the president and CEO of Las Vegas-based MRI International Inc. (MRI). Junzo Suzuki previously was MRI's executive vice president for Asia Pacific, and Paul Suzuki previously was the company's general manager for Japan operations. MRI purportedly specialized in "factoring," whereby the company purchased accounts receivable from medical providers at a discount, and then attempted to recover the entire amount, or at least more than the discounted amount, from the debtor.

According to allegations in the indictment, from at least 2009 to 2013, Fujinaga and the Suzukis fraudulently solicited investments from thousands of Japanese residents, and MRI currently owes investors over $1.5 billion. Specifically, the indictment alleges that Fujinaga and the Suzukis promised investors a series of interest payments that would accrue over the life of the investment and that would be paid out along with the face value of the investment at the conclusion of the investments' duration. The defendants allegedly solicited investments by, among other things, promising investors that their investments would be used only for the purchase of medical accounts receivable (MARS) and by representing that investors funds would be managed and safeguarded by an independent third-party escrow company.

The indictment further alleges that MRI operated as a Ponzi scheme, wherein the defendants used new investors' money to pay prior investors' maturing investments. According to the indictment, the defendants also allegedly used investors' funds for purposes other than the purchase of MARS, including paying themselves sales commissions, subsidizing gambling habits, funding personal travel by private jet, and other personal expenses.

The charges contained in an indictment are merely accusations. A defendant is presumed innocent until and unless proven guilty.

This case is being investigated by the FBI's Las Vegas Division. Significant assistance was provided by the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission, the Criminal Division's Office of International Affairs and Japanese authorities. This case is being prosecuted by Assistant Chief Albert B. Stieglitz Jr. and Trial Attorney Melissa Aoyagi of the Criminal Division's Fraud Section and First Assistant U.S. Attorney Steven W. Myhre of the District of Nevada.

Revisiting cold cases in Mendocino County, California, USA . Were these twin sisters residents in Mendocino County, California also? There is the Lake Pillsbury Ranch formerly the Fuller Ranch cutout of the Elite Bohemian Club. The geographical location is in Upper Lake, Lake County, CA 95485 and the mail delivery and mailing address for the Lake Pillsbury Ranch goes through the Potter Valley, Mendocino County, CA Post Office 95469. The Lake Pillsbury Ranch subdivision was started by Jackie Gleason and Jack Haley. What's interesting about the Bing Crosby wikipedia is the common denominator of Singer and Rat Pack member Frank Sinatra. In a news letter circa 1968 - 1969 for the Lake Pillsbury Homeowner's Association in the latter 1960's mentions a visit to the Ranch from Nancy Sinatra and her fiance. See FBI File #95-0. There is a trail up in the mountains by Lake Pillsbury and Covelo which is described as a State Ranger trail M1-6 where Colonel Crawford and his sister lived called "Cabbage Patch" because the heads of cabbage in this area grew to enormous sizes. There has also been rumored that Prince Philip, consort to Queen Elizabeth II of England, rode horse and hunted in the area of Mendocino County, California, USA and had a hunting lodge in this remote area.

Another Ranger Station that came up in this search of M1-6 Upper Lake Ranger Station is the following Upper Lake McDonald Ranger Station located in Glacier National Park in the state of Montana. The Upper Lake McDonald Ranger Station in Glacier National Park was a formerly isolated site that became an administrative center with the opening of the Going-to-the-Sun Road. The National Park Service Rustic cabin was typical of the preferred style for western park structures of the period.[2] The ranger station is similar to its counterparts at Belly River and Sherburne, as well as the Polebridge Ranger Station residence.[3]

by Bruce Anderson, February 13, 2008

The last time I saw Rusty was the Friday after the first big January storm. He hadn't had any electricity for several days. His place at The Woods, the oddly suburban senior housing complex in the Pygmy Forest of Little River three miles from the Pacific, was still strewn with down tree limbs. Mexicans were cleaning up. I asked him if The Woods could survive without Mexicans. "Hell, no. This country wouldn't survive without them, either." Rusty said so far as he was concerned the power could stay off permanently. He said he'd watched a lot of television in the year he'd lived at The Woods and "couldn't believe how bad it was." He said he was reading Montaigne and, I supposed, so deep in the 16th century that candlelight, good enough for ancient skeptics, was plenty good enough for modern ones like him, too. His cancer was in remission and he'd stopped talking like a man ready to die.

You don't have to be Montaigne to know that other people are mysteries, unknowable. I'd known Rusty and his wife, Flo, since 1984. When I met them they lived in a forested enclave near Mendocino. Their second house was on the bluffs of Caspar vertiginously perched directly above the pounding surf.

Rusty was a book guy, I was a book guy. That was our connection. Books were our church, the Hamilton remainder catalogue our sacrament. We exchanged bargain tips. His collection took up all his wall space. Mine took over my house.

I visited the Norvells when I was out on the coast, they stopped by Boonville when they were on the road south. Rusty occasionally wrote for my newspaper, my newspaper supported the environmental involvement that was a large part of the Norvells' lives. But the longer I knew them, the less I knew them, and the longer I knew them the more I came to sympathize with Mrs. Norvell, and came to regard my book friend as fortunate indeed to have such an unfailingly cheerful live-in nurse for the five decades she picked up the shards of her husband's many shattered lives. I wasn't surprised that Rusty got sick soon after Flo died, and wasn't surprised that Rusty's son Cove assumed Flo's incessant responsibilities.

The last time I visited Rusty at The Woods he told me that Flo had come to see him. He may have been reading Montaigne but the skepticism had briefly abandoned him. "You know Bruce, it's the damnedest thing. I was just sitting here right where I am now when I felt a hand patting me on the shoulder. I looked around and, of course, no one was there. But then Flo said to me, 'It's alright, Rusty. It's alright', and she patted me on the shoulder one more time and then she was gone."

I didn't know at first that Rusty was an alcoholic. Other people told me. He kept his drinking life away from me. Flo never talked to me about it either. The Norvells were of the generation and social class where scandalous behavior was, insofar as possible, confined to its victims, in this case the family. Today, of course, bad behavior is celebrated, but as generous and loyal as Rusty could be, and he often was very generous, he was, in the modern phrase, "a high maintenance person," and it was his wife who did almost all the maintaining. I'd call him and he wouldn't be at home, and Flo, always discreet, always protective, would cheerfully say, "I'll have him call you when he gets back," as if he'd just gone out to the store for a carton of milk and not to the rear unit of the Fort Bragg motel where he'd stay for days at a time with a case of whisky, and Flo would send money to the man who managed the place who would throw an edible life buoy into whisky river for the drowning man who would eventually float by.

Rusty would dive to these motel depths several times a year, but in between he read books, listened to music — he knew all about jazz — and occasionally wrote an article for me or one of the coast papers. Blessed by birth with Oklahoma oil money, Rusty and Flo were able to exist outside the economic pressures that otherwise would have doomed them given Rusty's volatile drinking. Not that he didn't work. In his way he worked hard. He worked at newspapering and teaching, but something would always "happen" and the Norvells would be on the road again. They traveled the world, having lived in Spain, Mexico, Japan,

Manhattan, San Francisco, and, finally, Mendocino.

Rusty was a better editor than he was a writer. And he was a very good editor in the old fashioned sense because he was not only a big reader but one of the many jobs he'd held was editor and reporter for several daily newspapers in the long gone times when even newspapers tried to be both interesting and clear, when journalists and their editors appreciated a well-turned sentence, a well-told story. Now, of course, most newspapers could simply be outsourced to, say, India, whose educated classes write better than most of the word processors processing the daily deluge of misinformation and tedious bilge force fed Americans these days. His own prose tended to get away from him in careless ways Rusty did not tolerate in others, me especially, and he'd phone me up almost every week to tell me how this or that story could have been improved. I seldom disagreed. I'd challenge him. "Come on down here every Tuesday and go over this thing, Rusty. It's no good after the fact, after it's already out there." He'd promise to "think it over," but he really didn't like doing what he was best at — making other people's prose better.

Rusty liked teaching, too, and from the passion he invested in the numerous errors, conceptual and real, in the spoken and written word around him, I knew he must have been a truly excellent teacher. He was certainly in demand as a teacher in his youth, having been engaged by a series of elite private prep schools, many of whose graduates would write to Rusty years later to tell him how much they'd benefited from his instruction. Locally, Rusty taught at the old Whale School in Albion but, and probably out of the anxiety public school administrators seem to feel at the prospect of genuinely talented individuals in their classrooms, Rusty never taught in any of the other local schools, which meant one more lost opportunity for local children.

He often had mysterious errands for me. Once he had me take his watch to a San Francisco repairman, "the only guy left in this country who can be trusted with it." When I arrived at the office of the Only Man Who Can Be Trusted With It, I was seven floors up in a non-descript building a block off Union Square. The door was locked. I knocked. A tremulous male voice asked me what I wanted. I said I'd brought Mr. Norvell's watch to be cleaned. The door flew open and an instantly effusive old man, "a Spaniard from Spain" he later informed me, told me I was "most welcome." He said it was "a great honor to be entrusted with such a fine instrument."

I've owned a Timex or two, but I'd never possessed any object approaching "fine instrument" status. And I hadn't opened the box I'd been entrusted with to look at the thing; I wasn't curious about it even though Rusty had emphasized that the watch was too valuable to send through the mail.

"My father gave it to me," Rusty had said. "It means everything to me." In that case, I thought, I had zero business transporting it, but I knew if I'd asked him for a favor Rusty would have instantly agreed, so...

The old Spaniard, speaking as reverently as if I held a lock of hair from Christ's suffering head, said the watch was Patek Phillipe gold and more than a hundred years old. Bowing his head, his voice lowering unctuously, the old man added, "and probably worth more than $40,000." I pantomimed tossing the box out the window. The watchmaker was unamused. "I will call Mr. Norvell when it is ready," he said, carefully removing the box from my clownish, irresponsible hands with both of his.

I've wondered how that watch survived its owner's many misadventures, and I hope now that Cove Norvell will own it.

One sunny summer day Rusty appeared at the paper's Boonville office. It was a Tuesday, production day for us, and not a day for distractions. Rusty had roared up in his big bomber of a Buick, one of the last really big ones Buick made. He was driving. Leonard Cirino, the Albion poet, sat in the passenger seat. We'd heard them coming up the driveway because, as always, Rusty was driving too fast for conditions, in this case the dusty forty-foot length of our driveway. I met them at the door. Rusty, in what we called his seaweed hat, a cowboy Stetson with a length of kelp in place of the usual hatband, was so drunk he wobbled. Cirino grinned that unnerving, maniacal grin he seemed to reserve for encounters with me. Rusty pulled a garbage bag of clothes from the back of his Buick 707 or whatever it was. "Keep these here for me, Bruce, I'm on my way to Nashville."

Nashville? Nashville, Tennessee? I asked, incredulous.

"That's the only Nashville there is, buddy," Cirino said, his deathhead's grin managing to out-shine the afternoon sun.

I told them to come in out of the heat and rest awhile because I wanted to get them away from the car so I could snag the keys out of the ignition. But the keys weren't in the ignition, they were in Rusty's pocket. I told Rusty he wouldn't make it to Yorkville let alone Nashville in the condition he was in.

"I've never known you to be judgmental, Bruce," Rusty said with audible disappointment.

"I've never known you to be suicidal, my friend," I replied.

The upshot was that I called the CHP, hoping the cops would head him off at Cloverdale. If he got that far. I knew in my bones he'd kill someone in that big Buick, and wouldn't my friends in the local media like that. "Enabler Editor's Pal Kills Family In Head-On Crash Near Boonville. Anderson Admits He Knew Friend Was Too Drunk Too Drive, But..."

Somehow Rusty got all the way down 101, all the way through the city, all the way to SF International, all the way onto the airplane, all the way to the only Nashville there is.

Months later my wife sold the garbage bag full of his clothes at a garage sale. She'd washed them, carefully folded them, arranged them on a table with the real cheap stuff where, she reported long after they were gone, "They went real fast. Where'd they come from anyway?" Months after his Nashville run Rusty called me to ask where his clothes were, which is when I discovered their fate. Flo laughed about it every time I saw her right up until the last time I saw her, and if ever there was a martyr to holy matrimony it was that lady.

According to a terse press release issued by the CHP last week, "Russel S. Norvell of Little River died Sunday afternoon, February 3rd, in a single car accident on Highway One near Gordon Lane, south of Mendocino at mile-marker 48.50. The accident occurred at 2:40pm under cold, cloudy conditions, following several days of rain. Norvell was southbound in a 2001 Toyota Prius when he lost control of the vehicle and ran off the road into a dirt drainage ditch, spinning backwards into a eucalyptus tree. Norvell was not wearing a seatbelt at the time."

"At the time" Russel Norvell died of a broken neck from driving backwards into the tree at about 50 miles an hour.

I'd talked to Rusty the Wednesday before he died. The power had been out again at The Woods, and he was still reading Montaigne. He told me his cancer was in remission, that he was feeling a lot better, that he was going to write the article on his illness he'd promised me. He was happy, optimistic. He wanted to go on living.

Rusty leaves behind his son Cove Norvell, Cove's wife Lorraine, and granddaughter, Elizabeth.

All of us who will miss Rusty will gather this Sunday in the Abalone Room of the Little River Inn at 2pm to remember him.

GRAPE SITUATION AT A STANDSTILL; LOCAL GROWERS THREATEN SUIT

Affairs as regards the prices for grapes seem to be somewhat up in the air this year. So far as can be ascertained there has been no particular price named, but it is stated that such sales as have been made in the Cloverdale and Healdsburg sections have brought $15 per ton. A large number of the growers there are not selling at that price, however, but are holding for $17. However, as stated above, there is no price and buyers are operating spasmodically. The crop in Ukiah valley is estimated at about 60 to 70 per cent.

A tangle has arisen between local growers and the French-American wine company which may result in a lawsuit being instituted against the company. The trouble arises in an alleged breach of faith on the part of the company, the growers alleging that those of them who had not signed up with the company last year got a dollar less per ton than the others, while the company had promised verbally that they would get the same price. The aggregate amounts to several thousand dollars.

PRUNES GOOD; PRICES FAIR – 450 TONS FROM THIS VALLEY

Prune growers in this valley are not in so very poor a condition this year, according to figures furnished by Wm. Cox, who annually buys a large portion of the Mendocino county crop. In fact the prune growers seem to be faring much better than their brothers engaged in the hop, grape, and pear industries. While the price is not a boom one, nevertheless it gives the grower a good return on his labor and the value of his land, being 3 ½ cents per pound for 80's. This means that 80's (prunes that run 80 to the pound) bring the grower $70 per ton; 70's bring him $80 per ton; 60's sell for $90 and 50's for $100, while 45's, which are about the largest, and fancy, bring $105.

The average grade in the valley seems to run from 50 to 80 this year and the output is figured by Mr. Cox at about 450 tons. The crop will therefore net the growers something like $30,000, quite a neat sum to help tide over the financial stringency.

In addition to the Ukiah crop there are the Anderson valley and Hopland crops. None of the Anderson valley growers have sold yet, with the exception of J.E. Wallach, and there are about 100 tons being cured there this year. Hopland will have about an equal amount.
The drop this year runs about 80 to 90 percent of an average crop. Ukiah valley's crop makes about 30 carloads this year, a little more than half of which was bought by Mr. Cox and the remainder by Bunt Bucknell.

UPPER LAKE FIRE INFLICTS MUCH DAMAGE

A fire at Upper Lake last Wednesday evening almost wiped the business portion of that thriving village from the map. The new store building of Frank Howe, the old building formerly occupied by Howe before he built his new store, the Scott garage, and a dwelling in the rear of the garage, all went up in the space of a few minutes.
The fire started in the garage and, it is stated, resulted from the careless handling of oil there. The garage was speedily a mass of flames, and the fire was so hot that nothing could be done to save any of the stock in Mr. Howe's store. His loss is said to be about $7000. The remainder of the loss is estimated at about $5000 or $6000.

WILLITS DRUGGIST BURNED BY ALCOHOL

Willits, Sept. 22 – Sunday morning Druggist W.T. Hearne was badly burned while working with an alcohol lamp at his store. He left an open bottle of alcohol too near the stove and the fumes ignited from the blaze and ran up to the ceiling and scorched the paint. The fire alarm was sounded and the fire department turned out but the blaze was put out before they reached the store. Mr. Hearne in trying to put out the blaze spilled some of the alcohol on his pants and this caught fire and burned his left leg quite seriously. He is still confined to his home but expects to be able to go to work again in a few days.

DEATH OF JEFFERSON GRAHAM

Jefferson Graham died at the family home near Largo last Saturday and was buried in the Ukiah cemetery Monday, the funeral being in charge of J.W. Eversole. A large cortege of friends and neighbors attended the obsequies. Mr. Graham was 77 years of age and leaves a widow and several grown children. He was universally respected by all who knew him and the relatives have the sympathy of many friends.

THOMPSON-NEWMAN CASE AGAIN IN COURT

The case of Thompson vs. Newman is again in court and occupied that tribunal all day yesterday. A large number of Comptche and coast residents were here in connection with it.

The phase of the case now being heard arises over the refusal of Newman to accept the estimate of the appraisers as to the value of the timber on the property. The appraisers placed a valuation of $190 on the timber, while Newman believes it is worth $4000. The land belongs to Mrs. Thompson and the timber to Newman, and she is bringing suit to force him to accept the estimate of the appraisers. Robert Duncan is her attorney, while Preston & Preston are appearing for Newman.

CASE DISMISSED AGAINST MCCOWEN

The case against Dist. Atty. Hale McCowen, alleged to have been fishing within 50 feet of a fish ladder in contravention of the law, was dismissed by Judge Crockett last Tuesday. Attys. M.H. Iverson, Hugh Preston and Robert Duncan appeared in behalf of the district attorney, while Atty. Duke, of the fish and game commission was handling the prosecution. The judge decided that there was not sufficient evidence on which to hold Mr. McCowen.

RE-ARRANGING VOTING PRECINCTS

Henry Keller and Sid Smith are at work this week gathering data for the re-arranging of the voting precincts of Ukiah. The new law makes it necessary to divide the large precincts into smaller ones, as there are to be but 300 voters to the precinct hereafter. County Surveyor Ed Smith has charge of the work of resurveying the county and laying the lines.
Not all the precincts in the county will be affected, as many are already under the limit of 300, but about thirty new ones will have to be added. There are 70 precincts at present and the new law will increase the number to nearly a hundred. The election this fall will not be affected, however, the precinct boundaries remaining the same as heretofore for it.

LEROY STILL IMPROVING

The drug store of Morris & LeRoy is still being improved. This week Mr. LeRoy is having new shelving placed in the back room and will move most of his drugs there, devoting the main room to the general stock, a large addition to which arrived this week.

I remember the Eversole Mortuary because this is where I went to talk to the funeral director about my cousin, Al Meyer and his wife, Mary Elizabeth Meyer's death from a car accident that occurred on May 20, 2002. The funeral director was very nervous, high strung and kept sniffing and wiping his runny nose. When I got up close to him to talk to him about the location of the bodies and personal possessions as well as what happened to the vehicle Mary Elizabeth was driving that day and details of the accident that involved both she and my cousin Al, I noticed the funeral director still had a rather large white crystalized meth or cocaine rock substance stuck inside one nostril.

At the time, this made me wonder if this was actually a front for a drug cartel shipping and money laundering operation. It's not any secret that drug cartels are satanic and engage in satanic rituals and ship large quantities of drugs in caskets with dead bodies and engage in cannibalism for a business. Or kill many to keep the shipment of drugs going... Boonville (formerly, The Corners and Kendall's City)[3] is a census-designated place (CDP)[4] in Mendocino County, California, United States.[2] It is located 12.5 miles (20 km) southwest of Ukiah,[3] at an elevation of 381 feet (116 m).[2] The population was 1,035 at the 2010 census.

History

Boonville was founded by John Burgots in 1862.[3] The place was originally called The Corners.[3] Burgots built a hotel, and in 1864 Alonzo Kendall built another hotel.[3] The town became known as Kendall's City.[3] W.W. Boone bought a store in town and gave the place its current name.[3]

The first post office opened in 1875, having been transferred from Anderson.[3]

Culture

Boonville is in the Anderson Valley, 115 miles (185 km) north of San Francisco. Boonville is best known as the source of the Boontling folk language. Bottles from the local Anderson Valley Brewing Company are labeled with the motto "Bahl Hornin'" which means "It's good drinkin'" in Boontling.

An Alsatian Varietals wine festival is held at the fairgrounds each February. In early spring (April or May), the annual Legendary Boonville Beer Festival is held at the fairgrounds, featuring beers from about 50 craft breweries.[5] A Pinot Noir Festival is held in May. In July, the Wool-growers' Barbecue and Sheepdog Trials is held at the fairgrounds. Boonville hosts the annual Mendocino County Fair in September. Boonville also hosts the long-running Sierra Nevada World Music Festival every summer solstice weekend in June.[6]

Boonville, despite its small population, has a minor reputation[according to whom?] among political leftists in the USA for countercultural ideals, including promotion oforganic food. The town serves as the setting for the novel Boonville (2001) by Robert Mailer Anderson. Some commentators believe Boonville may be the setting for the novel Vineland (1990) by Thomas Pynchon.[citation needed]

The town is known to Unificationists as the site of the successful but ill-fated Creative Community Project.[7]

The ZIP Code is 95415. The community is inside area code 707.

Geography

According to the United States Census Bureau, the CDP covers an area of 5.5 square miles (14.4 km²), all of it land.

Climate

This region experiences warm (but not hot) and dry summers, with no average monthly temperatures above 71.6 °F. According to the Köppen Climate Classification system, Boonville has a warm-summer Mediterranean climate, abbreviated "Csb" on climate maps.[8]

Demographics

The 2010 United States Census[9] reported that Boonville had a population of 1,035. The population density was 186.7 people per square mile (72.1/km²). The racial makeup of Boonville was 630 (60.9%) White, 9 (0.9%) African American, 18 (1.7%) Native American, 7 (0.7%) Asian, 2 (0.2%) Pacific Islander, 340 (32.9%) from other races, and 29 (2.8%) from two or more races. Hispanic or Latino of any race were 520 persons (50.2%).

The Census reported that 1,029 people (99.4% of the population) lived in households, 1 (0.1%) lived in non-institutionalized group quarters, and 5 (0.5%) were institutionalized.

There were 372 households, out of which 139 (37.4%) had children under the age of 18 living in them, 193 (51.9%) were opposite-sex married couples living together, 46 (12.4%) had a female householder with no husband present, 23 (6.2%) had a male householder with no wife present. There were 28 (7.5%) unmarried opposite-sex partnerships, and 4 (1.1%) same-sex married couples or partnerships. 77 households (20.7%) were made up of individuals and 28 (7.5%) had someone living alone who was 65 years of age or older. The average household size was 2.77. There were 262 families (70.4% of all households); the average family size was 3.12.

The population was spread out with 268 people (25.9%) under the age of 18, 90 people (8.7%) aged 18 to 24, 270 people (26.1%) aged 25 to 44, 275 people (26.6%) aged 45 to 64, and 132 people (12.8%) who were 65 years of age or older. The median age was 36.8 years. For every 100 females there were 112.1 males. For every 100 females age 18 and over, there were 114.2 males.

There were 413 housing units at an average density of 74.5 per square mile (28.8/km²), of which 190 (51.1%) were owner-occupied, and 182 (48.9%) were occupied by renters. The homeowner vacancy rate was 0%; the rental vacancy rate was 4.2%. 479 people (46.3% of the population) lived in owner-occupied housing units and 550 people (53.1%) lived in rental housing units.

Education

Elementary school students in Boonville attend Anderson Valley Elementary School. Middle and high school students attend Anderson Valley Junior-Senior High School. Both schools are located in Boonville.[10]

Politics

In the state legislature, Boonville is in the 2nd Senate District, represented by Democrat Mike McGuire,[11] and the 2nd Assembly District, represented by Democrat Jim Wood.[12]

Federally, Boonville is in California's 2nd congressional district, represented by Democrat Jared Huffman.[13]

By BILL BARROW, Associated Press

GREENVILLE, S.C. (AP) — Republican presidential hopeful Carly Fiorina has spent the last two weeks repeating an erroneous description of videos secretly recorded by anti-abortion activists. That seems bound to continue as she makes her opposition to Planned Parenthood a centerpiece of her 2016 campaign.

Campaigning in South Carolina on Friday, Fiorina said she "absolutely" stands by her criticism of Planned Parenthood. She accused the women's health organization — it's also the nation's largest abortion provider — of pushing "propaganda" against her while being "aided and abetted by the media."

Fiorina has brushed off the facts surrounding her claim as a "technicality." Planned Parenthood, meanwhile, survived this week the latest attempt of conservatives in Congress to cut off its federal funding and accused her of lying.

The flap began at Republicans' Sept. 16 presidential debate, when Fiorina brought up widely circulated videos secretly recorded by anti-abortion activists and showing Planned Parenthood executives discussing the sale of fetal tissue to researchers.

"As regards Planned Parenthood, anyone who has watched this videotape -- I dare Hillary Clinton, Barack Obama to watch these tapes," Fiorina said. "Watch a fully formed fetus on the table, its heart beating, its legs kicking while someone says we have to keep it alive to harvest its brain."

That detailed scene does not occur in the videos, produced by the anti-abortion Center for Medical Progress. One of the videos, still posted on the center's YouTube channel as of Friday, shows a woman identified as an "ex-procurement technician" from a firm other than Planned Parenthood discussing harvesting the brain of an aborted fetus.

As the woman talks, the video cuts away to show a fetus that producers say came from an older anti-abortion video. They say the fetus was aborted, though there is no proof of that or that the scene was filmed at a Planned Parenthood facility. There are no other persons shown in the clip discussing collecting any tissue.

A separate image shown later in the video is that of a stillborn baby miscarried in a hospital after 19 weeks of gestation.

After Fiorina was questioned multiple times about her claims, a pro-Fiorina super PAC released an online ad that again included the image, with the claim that "Carly Fiorina won the debate. Now come the false attacks."

CLV004914

Fiorina has pushed back in multiple interviews. Often, the crux of her argument, beyond sticking to her incorrect description of the anti-Planned Parenthood videos, is that she has not misrepresented the group's actions and that the larger issue is about the character of the nation.

"They're trying to have a conversation about a technicality about a videotape," Fiorina said last week at Christian women's health center in Spartanburg, South Carolina. The center, which does not provide abortions, has become a popular stop for Republican presidential candidates. "The character of this nation cannot be about butchery of babies for body parts," Fiorina said.

At another South Carolina stop, she linked liberals' support for abortion rights with environmental regulations. "They are perfectly prepared to destroy other people's jobs and livelihoods and communities in order to protect fish and frogs and flies," she said. "But they do not think a 17-week-old, a 20-week-old, a 24-week-old is worth saving. This, ladies and gentlemen, is hypocrisy."

Yet when asked specifically about the video, she's never budged. On NBC's Sept. 27 edition of "Meet the Press," host Chuck Todd asked Fiorina if she would admit to "exaggerating" the scene in question. "No, not at all," she said. "That scene absolutely does exist." But she has not produced the footage and even anti-abortion activists say it does not exist as she has described it.

Yet when asked specifically about the video, she's never budged. On NBC's Sept. 27 edition of "Meet the Press," host Chuck Todd asked Fiorina if she would admit to "exaggerating" the scene in question. "No, not at all," she said. "That scene absolutely does exist." But she has not produced the footage and even anti-abortion activists say it does not exist as she has described it.

On Friday, she asked in South Carolina, "Why is it Planned Parenthood cannot and will not deny late-term abortions are being performed for the purposes of obtaining brains and other body parts? … It's happening."

Planned Parenthood doesn't dispute that fetal tissue is sometimes taken for research, but notes the practice is legal and payments only cover expenses of the process.

"In two states, Planned Parenthood helps patients who want to donate tissue for fetal tissue research, following clear guidance that goes well above and beyond the legal requirements in this area," said spokesman Eric Ferrero, referring to California and Washington. "This work is not about 'harvesting' or 'selling' or 'profiting' – it is about helping facilitate patients' wishes to support medical research that can help treat and cure serious diseases."

Recent polling suggests Fiorina's criticism of Planned Parenthood is out of step with the wider electorate but in line with conservatives. Pew Research Center found in a Sept. 22-27 poll that 60 percent of adults in the U.S. wanted a budget deal to maintain funding for Planned Parenthood. But among Republicans, 66 percent said any budget deal must eliminate the money – 78 percent among those who identify as "conservative Republicans."

Now let's get back the obituary of "a 100 year old politician, Opponent of the Vietnam War and his taking on Hoover's FBI." Meet former three decade Democratic Congressman Don Edwards. Ref. - The Press Democrat, Sunday, October 4, 2015, Page B19.

Don Edwards, Congressman Who Championed Civil Rights, Dies at 100

Don Edwards, a former president of the California Young Republicans who became one of the most liberal Democrats in Congress, drafting every civil rights bill in the House for two decades, died on Thursday in Carmel-by-the-Sea, Calif. He was 100.

His son Leonard confirmed his death.

Mr. Edwards, an F.B.I. agent in the 1940s, was also an early opponent of the Vietnam War and a champion of civil liberties who took on the F.B.I. on domestic surveillance and budget issues.

He entered Congress in 1963, in time to vote for the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and the Voting Rights Act of 1965. After becoming chairman of the Judiciary Committee's subcommittee on civil and constitutional rights, he managed the Equal Rights Amendment on the House floor in 1971 and was the floor manager for all other civil rights bills.

Effective at working with Republicans, among them Hamilton Fish Jr. of New York, he was the chief House architect on civil rights bills through the 1991 law that overturned eight Supreme Court decisions narrowly interpreting the employment rights of women and minorities.

Mr. Edwards was able to work easily with Republicans on rights measures even though they rarely voted alike on anything else. He was an all-out liberal on issues from the impeachment of President Richard M. Nixon to the 1991 Persian Gulf war.

He retired in 1994 with a lifetime rating of 97 percent from the liberal Americans for Democratic Action, which he headed from 1965 to 1967. In 20 of his 32 years in Congress, he had a 100 percent score.

He said the most important of the civil rights bills he handled was the 1982 extension of the Voting Rights Act. In response to written questions in 2012, he said, "If you can't vote, you are not a real citizen."

That bill was a major test because President Ronald Reagan's administration wanted to end the process by which states with histories of discrimination had to have new election laws “pre-cleared” by the Justice Department before they could take effect.

(In 2013, the Supreme Court, in a 5-to-4 vote, effectively struck down that section of the law, freeing nine states, mostly in the South, to change their election laws without advance federal approval.)

Ralph G. Neas, then the executive director of the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, an umbrella group, called Mr. Edwards’s leadership “indispensable” in working out a bill that preserved pre-clearance. Mr. Neas said that by overcoming the Reagan administration on that measure, Mr. Edwards and Mr. Fish set the stage for several other legislative victories over the next 10 years.

Those successes included the Americans With Disabilities Act and a law that overcame a Supreme Court decision that had limited cutoffs of aid to colleges that discriminated, putting teeth in the Fair Housing Act. “It’s a prodigious civil rights record,” Mr. Neas said.

A longtime colleague on the Judiciary Committee, Robert W. Kastenmeier, Democrat of Wisconsin, said in 2012, “I don’t think there was anybody who was as constant in his support for both civil liberties and civil rights as he.”

William Donlon Edwards was born on [redacted], in San Jose, Calif. He graduated in 1936 from Stanford University, where he starred on the golf team. He played into his 90s. In 1950, he won the Bing Crosby Clambake at Pebble Beach as an amateur teamed with the professional golfer Marty Furgol.

After attending law school at Stanford, he passed the bar in 1939 and became an F.B.I. agent the next year. He joined the Navy in 1942 and served as an intelligence officer ashore and then as a gunnery officer on fast, armed cargo ships.

After being discharged in 1945, he joined his father’s land title firm. But when he divorced his first wife, his father, who disapproved of the divorce, forced him out. So in 1951, Mr. Edwards founded the Valley Title Insurance Company with his second wife. It prospered.

He became politically active in the 1950s, first as president of the California Young Republicans while Earl Warren, a moderate Republican, was governor. “But the Republicans were mostly too conservative,” he said in 2012, “and I was basically liberal. I became disillusioned and moved away from the party.”

When California’s growing population led to the creation of eight new congressional districts in 1962, Mr. Edwards ran in one in San Jose. In a four-way Democratic primary, he received 35.9 percent of the vote and won by 726 votes over Mayor John Stevenson of Fremont. He won the general election easily and never had a close race again.

One of his first moves in the House was to join a small group of liberals in trying to abolish the Un-American Activities Committee, which critics said smeared individuals without discovering any subversive activities. He persisted until he succeeded in 1975.

His involvement in civil rights took on a personal note in 1964, when he visited Sunflower County, Miss., where his son Leonard was working to register African-American voters. Mr. Edwards was unable to persuade local officials to register them. But after returning to Washington, he helped blacks in that district win federal housing grants, something their own representative, who was white, had not done.

Mr. Edwards turned against President Lyndon B. Johnson over the war in Vietnam and was the first House member to back Senator Eugene J. McCarthy’s 1968 campaign against him.

Despite his F.B.I. background, Mr. Edwards was not a supporter of its director, J. Edgar Hoover. In 2012, he said one of the first things he had done in the House was to have the F.B.I. audited. The F.B.I. argued that the property it confiscated offset all its expenses and that the bureau “cost the taxpayers nothing.”

“They tried to say they couldn’t be audited, but they were,” Mr. Edwards said, “and it turned out they were counting such things as the face value of counterfeit money.” Such questioning of the agency, he added, “set the stage for J. Edgar and my longstanding differences of opinion.”

The enmity was evident in 1969, when Mr. Edwards said he would not run again. Years later, when Mr. Edwards found a newspaper article about that decision (he later changed his mind) in his F.B.I. file on which Hoover had written, “Good riddance,” he hung it proudly in his Washington apartment.

Besides Leonard, Mr. Edwards is survived by three other sons, Samuel, Bruce and Thomas.

His first two marriages ended in divorce. His third wife, Edith Wilkie, died in 2011 after 29 years of marriage. He is also survived by four grandchildren and five great-grandchildren.

Mr. Edwards’s efforts to defend and promote civil liberties were not always as successful as his anti-discrimination work. For example, over his protests, the House passed a 1981 bill making it a crime to disclose a C.I.A. agent’s identity.

But he led successful fights to curb the F.B.I.’s surveillance activities and used his subcommittee to bury proposed constitutional amendments on flag-burning, busing, abortion and a balanced federal budget. That record, said Barney Frank, a Massachusetts Democrat who was a colleague in the House for many years, made him “the purest civil libertarian” in the House. Mr. Frank called him “a quiet zealot” for free speech.

In 1994, Mr. Edwards summed up his record to The San Jose Mercury News. “It is the irresistible impulse of government to assume more power,” he said. “My role has been to say no.”

Correction: October 6, 2015
Because of an editing error, an obituary on Saturday about the longtime Democratic congressman Don Edwards referred imprecisely to a 1969 newspaper article that Mr. Edwards found in his F.B.I. file. Although the article reported that he had decided not to run for re-election, he did end up running — and winning.

A few questions to Question Authority regarding the newspaper article written above. The Pros and Cons of a politician....

Mr. Edwards was an FBI agent in the 1940's under Hoover's administration.

He entered Congress in 1963...

"Effective at working with Republicans, among them Hamilton Fish, Jr. of New York, he was the chief House architect on civil rights bills through the 1991 law that overturned eight Supreme Court decisions narrowly interpreting the employment rights of women and minorities."

Question: How does a politician overturn a Supreme Court decision?

"Edwards was able to work easily with Republicans on rights measures even though they rarely voted alike on anything else." Contradiction: "He was an all out liberal on issues from the impeachment of President Richard M. Nixon to the 1991 Persian Gulf war."

"He said the most important of the civil rights bills he handled was the 1982 extension of the Voting Rights Act. In response to written questions in 2012, he said, "If you can't vote, you are not a real citizen." Question: Spreading the boundaries into an "open society?"

"William Donlon Edwards was born on January 6, 1915 , in San Jose. He graduated in 1936 from Stanford University, where he starred on the golf team. He played into his 90s. In 1950, he won the Bing Crosby Clambake at Pebble Beach as an amateur teamed professional golfer Marty Furgol."

Davis College Republicans (DCR) is a conservative political group on the UC Davis campus and a chapter of California College Republicans, which is a state ...

In each state, whichever party garners a majority of popular votes, regardless of how narrow the margin, wins all the electoral votes. By forcing residents in each state ultimately to vote as a block, the system is supposed to ensure that small states' interests are not drowned out by those of larger states.

In all, there are 538 electoral votes and the number given to each state reflects the sum of the representatives and senators it sends to Congress. It takes 270 or more electoral college votes to win the election.The biggest states California (55), New York (31), Texas (34), Pennsylvania (21) have the most impact on the result of the presidential election.

Usually, the result is nearly the same as it would have been if the election were direct. Yet the system has produced presidents who received a minority of the popular vote but a majority of the electoral votes. NOTE: In the elections of Harry S Truman, Woodrow Wilson and Abraham Lincoln, there were more than two candidates and each of the elected Presidents won more popular votes than any of their respective opponents.

President Bill Clinton was also elected in 1992 with only 43 percent of the popular vote, but 370 electoral votes. In his case there was also more than two candidates.

Several times in recent electoral college history, a relatively small shift in voter preference in key states could have reversed election outcomes.

In prior elections, four U.S candidate for President won the popular vote but lost the presidency: Andrew Jackson won the popular vote but lost the election to John Quincy Adams in 1824; Samuel J. Tilden won the popular vote but lost the election to Rutherford B. Hayes in 1876; Grover Cleveland won the popular vote but lost the election to Benjamin Harrison in 1888, and Al Gore won the popular vote but lost the election to George W. Bush in 2000.

Question Authority....

Question authority

(Redirected from Question Authority)

"Question authority" is a popular slogan often used on bumperstickers, T-shirts and as graffiti. The slogan was popularized by controversial psychologist Timothy Leary,[1] although some people have suggested that the idea behind the slogan can be traced back to the ancient Greek philosopher Socrates.[2] One of the most influential icons in the counterculture movement which formed in the late 1960s out of opposition to the Vietnam War's escalation, Leary gained influence among much of the Western youth by advocating the use of Lysergic acid diethylamide (LSD) - which was criminalized in the United States in 1966 - [3] as a way to escape from the burdens of society.[3] Following the Watergate Scandal, which resulted in the resignation of US President Richard Nixon and the conviction of several officials in the Nixon administration, the slogan became arguably the most accepted form of ideology among baby boomers.[4]
It is intended to encourage people to avoid fallacious appeals to authority. The term has always symbolized the necessity of paying attention to the rules and regulations promulgated by a government unto its citizenry. However, psychologists have also criticized Leary's method of questioning authority and have argued that it resulted in widespread dysfunctionality.[5] In their book Question Authority, Think For Yourself, psychologists Beverly Potter and Mark Estren alleged that the practice of Leary's philosophy enhances a person's self-interest and greatly weakens the ability to cooperate with others.[5] Psychiatrist Robert Colesalso described the practice of Leary's philosophy as "dangerous" and "destructive" behavior.[1]

Eugene Joseph "Gene" McCarthy ([redacted] – December 10, 2005) was an American politician, poet, and a long-time member of the United States Congressfrom Minnesota. He served in the U.S. House of Representatives from 1949 to 1959 and the U.S. Senate from 1959 to 1971.

In the 1968 presidential election, McCarthy was the first candidate to challenge incumbent Lyndon B. Johnson for the Democratic nomination for president of the United States, running on an anti-Vietnam War platform. The unexpected vote total he achieved in the New Hampshire primary and his strong polling in the upcoming Wisconsin primary led Johnson to withdraw from the race, and lured Robert F. Kennedy into the contest. Fellow Minnesotan US Vice-President Hubert Humphrey also entered the race after Johnson's withdrawal. McCarthy would unsuccessfully seek the presidency five times altogether.

Early life

McCarthy was born in Watkins, Minnesota. He was the son of a deeply religious mother of German descent, Anna (née Baden), and strong-willed father of Irish descent, Michael J. McCarthy,[2] who was a postmaster and cattle buyer known for his earthy wit. McCarthy grew up in Watkins, Minnesota, as one of four children, and attended St. Anthony's Catholic School in Watkins. A bright student who spent hours reading his aunt's Harvard Classics, he was deeply influenced by the monks at nearby St. John's Abbey and University. McCarthy spent nine months as a novice before he left the monastery, causing a fellow novice to say, "It was like losing a 20-game winner."[3]
McCarthy graduated from Saint John's Preparatory School (Collegeville, Minnesota) in 1931. He was a 1935 graduate of Saint John's University in Collegeville, Minnesota. McCarthy earned his master's degree from the University of Minnesota in 1939. He taught in various public schools in Minnesota and North Dakota from 1935 to 1940, when he became a professor of economics and education at St. John's, working there from 1940 to 1943.
He was a civilian technical assistant in the Military Intelligence Division of the War Department in 1944 and an instructor in sociology and economics at the College of St. Thomas, St. Paul, Minnesota from 1946 to 1949.

Entry into politics

McCarthy became a member of the Minnesota Democratic-Farmer-Labor Party. In 1948 he won election to the United States House of Representatives with labor and Catholic support,[4] representing Minnesota's 4th congressional district until 1959. In 1958 he won election to the U.S. Senate.

United States Senator

He served as a member of (among other committees) the powerful Senate Foreign Relations Committee.
McCarthy became known to a larger audience in 1960 when he supported twice-defeated Presidential candidate Adlai Stevenson for the Democratic nomination. He pleaded during his speech, "Do not reject this man who made us all proud to be called Democrats!" He was considered as a possible running mate for Lyndon Johnson in 1964, only to see fellow Minnesota Senator Hubert Humphrey chosen for that position.[5]
Along with Ted Kennedy, McCarthy was one of the original co-sponsors of the Immigration Act of 1965. He later regretted this, noting that "unrecognized by virtually all of the bill's supporters, were provisions which would eventually lead to unprecedented growth in numbers and the transfer of policy control from the elected representatives of the American people to individuals wishing to bring relatives to this country".[6] Taking a turn to the right, McCarthy became a member of the Board of Advisors of the Federation for American Immigration Reform.[7]

McCarthy met with Marxist revolutionary Che Guevara in New York City in 1964 to discuss repairing relations between the U.S. and Cuba.[8] The two met in journalist Lisa Howard's Park Avenue apartment. The film Che: Part One depicts this event.[citation needed]

1968 presidential campaign

Main article: Eugene McCarthy presidential campaign, 1968

In 1968 Allard K. Lowenstein and his anti-Vietnam War Dump Johnson movement recruited McCarthy to run against incumbent President Lyndon Johnson. Reportedly, Lowenstein first attempted to recruit SenatorRobert F. Kennedy, who declined to run, then Senator George S. McGovern, who also declined to run against Johnson. McCarthy entered and almost defeated Johnson in the New Hampshire Democratic primary, with the intention of influencing the federal government — then controlled by Democrats — to curtail its involvement in the Vietnam War. A number of anti-war college students and other activists from around the country traveled to New Hampshire to support McCarthy's campaign. Some anti-war students who had the long-haired, counterculture appearance of hippies chose to cut their long hair and shave off their beards, in order to campaign for McCarthy door-to-door, a phenomenon that led to the informal slogan "Get clean for Gene".[9]

McCarthy's decision to run arose partly as an outcome of opposition to the war by Wayne Morse of Oregon, one of the two Senators to vote against the Gulf of Tonkin Resolution of August 1964. Morse gave speeches denouncing the war before it had entered the consciousness of most Americans. Following that, several politically active Oregon Democrats asked Robert Kennedy to run as an anti-war candidate. Initially Kennedy refused, so the group asked McCarthy to run, and he responded favorably.

McCarthy declared his candidacy on November 30, 1967, saying, "I am concerned that the Administration seems to have set no limit to the price it is willing to pay for a military victory." Political experts and the news media dismissed his candidacy, and he was given little chance of making any impact against Johnson in the primaries.[10] But public perception of him changed following the Tet Offensive (January 30 - February 23, 1968), the aftermath of which saw many Democrats grow disillusioned with the war, and quite a few interested in an alternative to LBJ. McCarthy said "My decision to challenge the President's position and the administration's position has been strengthened by recent announcements out of the administration. The evident intention to escalate and to intensify the war in Vietnam, and on the other hand, the absence of any positive indication or suggestion for a compromise or for a negotiated political settlement."[11]

As his volunteers (led by youth coordinator Sam Brown) went door to door in New Hampshire, and as the media began paying more serious attention to the Senator, McCarthy began to rise in the opinion polls. When McCarthy scored 42% to Johnson's 49% in the New Hampshire popular vote (and 20 of the 24 N.H. delegates to the Democratic national nominating convention) on March 12 it became clear that deep division existed among Democrats on the war issue. By this time, Johnson had become inextricably defined by Vietnam, and this demonstration of divided support within his party meant his reelection (only four years afterwinning the highest percentage of the popular vote in modern history) seemed unlikely. On March 16 Kennedy announced that he would run; many Democrats saw Kennedy as a stronger candidate than McCarthy.

On March 31, in a surprise move, Johnson announced that he would not seek reelection. Following that, McCarthy won in Wisconsin, where the Kennedy campaign was still getting organized. McCarthy also won in Oregon against a well-organized Kennedy effort.

Even as McCarthy styled himself the clean politician, however, he dished it out, too. He mocked Robert Kennedy and his supporters. A major gaffe occurred in Oregon, when McCarthy sniffed that Kennedy supporters were "less intelligent" than his own and belittled Indiana (which had by then gone for Kennedy) for lacking a poet of the stature of Robert Lowell—a friend of McCarthy's who often traveled with him.[12]

Quite a few[quantify] of the people who had joined McCarthy's effort early on were Kennedy loyalists. Now that Kennedy was in the race, many jumped ship to his campaign, and they urged McCarthy to drop out and support Kennedy for the nomination. However, McCarthy resented the fact that Bobby had let him do the "dirty work" of challenging Johnson, and then only entered the race once it became apparent that the President was vulnerable. As a result, while he initially entered the campaign with few illusions of winning, McCarthy now devoted himself to beating Kennedy (and Hubert Humphrey, who entered the race after LBJ removed himself), and gaining the nomination.

Vice President Hubert Humphrey, long a champion of labor unions and of civil rights, entered the race with the support of the party "establishment," including most members of Congress, mayors, governors and labor unions. He entered the race too late to enter any primaries, but had the support of the president and of many Democratic insiders.[who?] Robert Kennedy, like his brother before him, planned to win the nomination through popular support in the primaries. McCarthy and Kennedy squared off in California, each knowing that the state would make or break them. They both campaigned vigorously up and down the state, with many polls showing them neck-and-neck, and a few even predicting a McCarthy victory.

However, a televised debate between them began to tilt undecided voters away from the Minnesota Senator. McCarthy made two ill-considered statements: That he would accept a coalition government including Communists in Saigon, and that only the relocation of inner-city blacks would solve the urban problem. Kennedy pounced, portraying the former idea as soft on communism, and the latter diagnosis as a scheme to bus tens of thousands of ghetto residents into white, conservative Orange County.[12] In the end, McCarthy appeared both remote on the issues and ill-tempered toward his opponent.

Kennedy took the crucial California primary on June 4, but was shot after his victory speech at the Ambassador Hotel in Los Angeles, and died soon afterwards.
In response, McCarthy refrained from political action for several days, but did not remove himself from the race. One aide recalled him sneering about his fallen rival, "Demagoguing to the last". Another heard him say that Kennedy "brought it on himself"—implying that because Kennedy had promised military support to the state of Israel, he had somehow provoked Sirhan Sirhan, the Palestinian gunman who killed him.[13]
Despite strong showings in several primaries — indeed, he won more votes than any other Democratic candidate — McCarthy garnered only 23 percent of the delegates at the 1968 Democratic National Convention, largely due to the control of state-party organizations over the delegate-selection process. After the Kennedy assassination, many delegates for Kennedy chose to support George McGovern rather than McCarthy. Moreover, although the eventual nominee, Vice President Hubert Humphrey, was not clearly an anti-war candidate, some anti-war Democrats hoped that Humphrey as President might succeed where Johnson had failed — in extricating the United States from Vietnam. McCarthy eventually gave a lukewarm endorsement of Humphrey.
Although McCarthy did not win the Democratic nomination, the anti-war "New Party", which ran several candidates for President that year, listed him as their nominee on the ballot in Arizona, where he received 2,751 votes. He also received 20,721 votes as a write-in candidate in California.
Following the 1968 election, McCarthy returned to the Senate, but announced that he would not be running for reelection in 1970, to the dismay of many Minnesotans. He disappointed many more people nationwide by declining to take a leadership role in Congress against the war. Indeed, he almost seemed to take a turn to the political Right during his final two years in the Senate, as witnessed by his opposition to PresidentRichard Nixon's Family Assistance Plan, a form of "reverse income tax" to help the poor get off of welfare and a program similar to a plan he had proposed several years earlier—though many liberal senators and representatives also opposed the plan.
Politics after the Senate

Presidential campaign 1972

Main article: U.S. presidential election, 1972

McCarthy returned to politics as a candidate for the Democratic Presidential nomination in 1972, but he fared poorly in New Hampshire and Wisconsin and soon dropped out.

Main article: U.S. presidential election, 1976

After the 1972 campaign, he left the Democratic Party, and ran as an Independent candidate for President in the 1976 election. During that campaign, he took a libertarian stance on civil liberties, promised to createfull employment by shortening the work week, came out in favor of nuclear disarmament, attacked the Internal Revenue Service,[14] and declared whom he would nominate to various Cabinet postings if elected.

Mainly, however, he battled ballot access laws that he deemed too restrictive and encouraged voters to reject the two-party system.[15]
His numerous legal battles during the course of the election, along with a strong grassroots effort in friendly states, allowed him to appear on the ballot in 30 states and eased ballot access for later third party candidates. His party affiliation was listed on ballots, variously, as "Independent," "McCarthy '76," "Non-Partisan," "Nom. Petition," "Nomination," "Not Designated," and "Court Order". Although he was not listed on the ballot in California and Wyoming, he was recognized as a write-in candidate in those states. In many states, he did not run with a vice presidential nominee, but he came to have a total of 15 running mates in states where he was required to have one. At least eight of his running mates were women.[16]
Nationally McCarthy received 740,460 votes for 0.91% of the total vote finishing third in the election.[17] His best showing came in Oregon where he received 40,207 votes for 3.90% of the vote.[18]

Further activism

He opposed Watergate-era campaign finance laws, becoming a plaintiff in the landmark case of Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1 (1976), in which the U.S. Supreme Court held that certain provisions of federal campaign finance laws were unconstitutional.[19] McCarthy, along with the New York Civil Liberties Union, philanthropist Stewart Mott, the Conservative Party of New York State, the Mississippi Republican Party, and theLibertarian Party, were the plaintiffs in Buckley, becoming key players in killing campaign spending limits and public financing of political campaigns.
In 1980, dismayed by what he saw as the abject failure of the Jimmy Carter presidency (later he would say, "he was the worst president we ever had" [20]), he appeared in a campaign ad for Libertarian candidate Ed Clark, and also wrote the introduction to Clark's campaign book.[21] He eventually endorsed Ronald Reagan for the presidency.[22]

Final campaigns

In 1982, he ran for the U.S Senate but lost the Democratic primary to businessman Mark Dayton by 69% to 24%.
In the 1988 election, his name appeared on the ballot as the Presidential candidate of a handful of left-wing state parties, such as the Consumer Party in Pennsylvania and the Minnesota Progressive Party in Minnesota. In his campaign he supported trade protectionism, Reagan's Strategic Defense Initiative and the abolition of the two-party system.[23] He received 30,905 votes.[24]
In 1992, returning to the Democratic Party, he entered the New Hampshire primary and campaigned for the Democratic Presidential nomination, but was excluded from the first and therefore most important televised debate by its moderator Tom Brokaw of NBC. McCarthy, along with other candidates who had been excluded from the 1992 Democratic debates (including two-time New Alliance Party Presidential candidate Lenora Fulani, former Irvine, California mayor Larry Agran, "Billy Jack" actor Tom Laughlin, and others) staged protests and unsuccessfully took legal action in an attempt to be included in the debates. Unlike the other excluded candidates mentioned, McCarthy was a longstanding national figure and unlike all those who were in the debates, including Bill Clinton, McCarthy had run for the President in previous elections.

Publishing

After leaving the Senate in 1971, McCarthy became a senior editor at Harcourt Brace Jovanovich Publishing and a syndicated newspaper columnist.

McCarthy took up writing poetry in the 1960s, and his increased political prominence led to increased interest in his published works. "If any of you are secret poets, the best way to break into print is to run for the presidency," he wrote in 1968.[25] He published a collection of poetry entitled Cool Reflections: Poetry For The Who, What, When, Where and Especially Why of It All (ISBN 1-57553-595-5.)

Some of his poems demonstrated his views on the Vietnam War.

Private life

He and his wife had five children, Christopher Joseph McCarthy (April 30, 1946 – April 30, 1946), Eleanor McCarthy Howell (born October 30, 1947), Mary Abigail McCarthy (April 29, 1949 – July 28, 1990), Michael Benet McCarthy (born April 5, 1952) and Margaret Alice McCarthy (born July 17, 1956).

In 1969, McCarthy left his wife, Abigail, after 24 years of marriage, but the two never divorced. McCarthy was rumored to be having a long-term affair with prominent columnist and journalist Shana Alexander. However, according to Dominic Sandbrook's recent McCarthy biography, it was the late CBS News correspondent Marya McLaughlin [26] with whom McCarthy was actually involved, in a long-term relationship that lasted until McLaughlin's death in 1998.[27]

Death and legacy

McCarthy died of complications from Parkinson's disease at the age of 89 on December 10, 2005 in a retirement home in Georgetown, Washington, D.C., where he had lived for the previous few years. His eulogy was given by former President Bill Clinton.

Following his death the College of Saint Benedict and Saint John's University dedicated their Public Policy Center the Eugene J. McCarthy Center for Public Policy.[28] The Democratic party memorialized his death during the 2008 Democratic National Convention in Denver, Colorado, on August 28, 2008. The memorial included pictures of several prominent Democrats who had died during the 4-year period since the 2004 Convention displayed on a large screen. During Senator McCarthy's tribute, the screen displaying his photograph left off his first name but included his middle name, calling him "Senator Joseph McCarthy." Joseph McCarthy was a notable Republican Senator from Wisconsin famous for his anti-Communist campaigning and sparring with journalist Edward R. Murrow.[29] In 2009, St. John's University honored McCarthy by establishing the Eugene McCarthy Distinguished Public Service Award.[30]

Eugene J. McCarthy's files as U.S. Congress member (Democratic Farmer-Labor) from

Minnesota's fourth district (1949–1958) and as U.S. senator from Minnesota (1959–1970) are available for research use. They include executive files, general files, legislative files, personal files, political and campaign (including senatorial, vice presidential, and presidential) files, public relations files, sound and visual materials (with photographs), and speeches.[31]

Flag of Japan

Japan

Name	Nisshōki[1] or Hinomaru[2]
Use	Civil and state flag, civil and state ensign
Proportion	2:3[1]
Adopted	February 27, 1870 (as the civil ensign by Proclamation No. 57); August 13, 1999 (as the national flag and slight modifications to the design of the flag)
Design	A red sun-disc centered on a white field

Use	Naval ensign
Proportion	2:3[3]
Adopted	Originally introduced on October 7, 1889; Re-adopted on June 30, 1954
Design	The Rising Sun Flag as used by the JMSDF; White with a red disc slightly to the hoist with 16 rays extending from the disc to the edges of the flag.

The national flag of Japan is a white rectangular flag with a large red disc (representing the sun) in the center. This flag is officially called Nisshōki (?, "sun-mark flag") in Japanese, but is more commonly known as Hinomaru (?, "circle of the sun"). The Nisshōki flag is designated as the national flag in the Law Regarding the National Flag and National Anthem, which was promulgated and became effective on August 13, 1999. Although no earlier legislation had specified a national flag, the sun-disc flag had already become the de facto national flag of Japan. Two proclamations issued in 1870 by the Daijō-kan, the governmental body of the early Meiji Era, each had a provision for a design of the national flag. A sun-disc flag was adopted as the national flag for merchant ships under Proclamation No. 57 of Meiji 3 (issued on February 27, 1870), and as the national flag used by the Navy under Proclamation No. 651 of Meiji 3 (issued on October 27, 1870). Use of the Hinomaru was severely restricted during the early years of the American occupation after World War II; these restrictions were later relaxed.

The sun plays an important role in Japanese mythology and religion as the Emperor is said to be the direct descendent of the sun goddess Amaterasu and the legitimacy of the ruling house rested on this divine appointment and descent from the chief deity of the predominant Shinto religion. The name of the country as well as the design of the flag reflect this central importance of the sun. The ancient history Shoku Nihongi says that Emperor Mommu used a flag representing the sun in his court in 701, and this is the first recorded use of a sun-motif flag in Japan. The oldest existing flag is preserved in Unpō-ji temple, Kōshū, Yamanashi, which is older than the 16th century, and an ancient legend says that the flag was given to the temple by Emperor Go-Reizei in the 11th century.[4][5][6] During the Meiji Restoration, both the sun disc and theRising Sun Ensign of the Imperial Japanese Navy became major symbols in the emerging Japanese empire. Propaganda posters, textbooks, and films depicted the flag as a source of pride and patriotism. In Japanese homes, citizens were required to display the flag during national holidays, celebrations and other occasions as decreed by the government. Different tokens of devotion to Japan and its Emperor featuring the Hinomaru motif became popular during the Second Sino-Japanese War and other conflicts. These tokens ranged from slogans written on the flag to clothing items and dishes that resembled the flag.
Public perception of the national flag varies. To some Japanese, the flag represents Japan, and no other flag could take its place. Historically, both Western and Japanese sources claimed the flag was a powerful and enduring symbol to the Japanese. Since the end of World War II (the Pacific War), the use of the flag and the national anthem Kimigayo has been a contentious issue for Japan's public schools. Disputes about their use have led to protests and lawsuits. The flag is not frequently displayed in Japan due to its association with ultranationalism. To Okinawans, the flag represents the events of World War II and the subsequent U.S. military presence there. For some nations that had been occupied by Japan, the flag is a symbol of aggression and imperialism.
The Hinomaru was used as a tool against occupied nations for purposes of intimidation, asserting Japan's dominance, or subjugation. Several military banners of Japan are based on the Hinomaru, including the sunrayed Naval Ensign. The Hinomaru also serves as a template for other Japanese flags in public and private use.

History

The exact origin of the Hinomaru is unknown,[7] but the rising sun seems to have had some symbolic meaning since the early 7th century (the Japanese archipelago is east of the Asian mainland, and is thus where the sun "rises"). In 607, an official correspondence that began with "from the Emperor of the rising sun" was sent to Chinese Emperor Yang of Sui.[8] Japan is often referred to as "the land of the rising sun".[9] In the 12th-century work, The Tale of the Heike, it was written that different samurai carried drawings of the sun on their fans.[10] One legend related to the national flag is attributed to the Buddhist priest Nichiren. Supposedly, during a 13th-centuryMongolian invasion of Japan, Nichiren gave a sun banner to the shogun to carry into battle.[11] The sun is also closely related to the Imperial family, as legend states the imperial throne was descended from the sun goddess Amaterasu.[12][13]

One of Japan's oldest flags is housed at the Unpo-ji temple in Yamanashi Prefecture. Legend states it was given by Emperor Go-Reizei to Minamoto no Yoshimitsu and has been treated as a family treasure by the Takeda clan for the past 1,000 years,[14] and at least it is older than 16th century.

The earliest recorded flags in Japan date from the unification period in the late 16th century. The flags belonged to each Daimyo and were used primarily in battle. Most of the flags were long banners usually charged with the mon (family crest) of the Daimyo lord. Members of the same family, such as a son, father, and brother, had different flags to carry into battle. The flags served as identification, and were displayed by soldiers on their backs and horses. Generals also had their own flags, most of which differed from soldiers' flags due to their square shape.[15]

In 1854, during the Tokugawa shogunate, Japanese ships were ordered to hoist the Hinomaru to distinguish themselves from foreign ships.[10] Before then, different types of Hinomaru flags were used on vessels that were trading with the Americans and Russians.[7] The Hinomaru was decreed the merchant flag of Japan in 1870 and was the legal national flag from 1870 to 1885, making it the first national flag Japan adopted.[16][17]

While the idea of national symbols was strange to the Japanese, the Meiji Government needed them to communicate with the outside world. This became especially important after the landing of U.S. Commodore Matthew Perry in Yokohama Bay.[18] Further Meiji Government implementations gave more identifications to Japan, including the anthem Kimigayo and the imperial seal.[19] In 1885, all previous laws not published in the Official Gazette of Japan were abolished.[20] Because of this ruling by the new cabinet of Japan, the Hinomaru was the de facto national flag since no law was in place after the Meiji Restoration.[21]

The use of the national flag grew as Japan sought to develop an empire, and the Hinomaru was present at celebrations after victories in the First Sino-Japanese andRusso-Japanese Wars. The flag was also used in war efforts throughout the country.[22] A Japanese propaganda film in 1934 portrayed foreign national flags as incomplete or defective with their designs, while the Japanese flag is perfect in all forms.[23] In 1937, a group of girls from Hiroshima Prefecture showed solidarity with Japanese soldiers fighting in China during the Second Sino-Japanese War, by eating "flag meals" that consisted of an umeboshi in the middle of a bed of rice. The*Hinomaru bento* became the main symbol of Japan's war mobilization and solidarity with her soldiers until the 1940s.[24]

Japan's early victories in the Sino-Japanese War resulted in the Hinomaru again being used for celebrations. It was seen in the hands of every Japanese during parades.[22] Textbooks during this period also had the Hinomaru printed with various slogans expressing devotion to the Emperor and the country. Patriotism was taught as a virtue to Japanese children. Expressions of patriotism, such as displaying the flag or worshiping the Emperor daily, were all part of being a "good Japanese."[25]

The flag was a tool of Japanese imperialism in the occupied Southeast Asian areas during Second World War: people had to use the flag,[26] and schoolchildren sang*Kimigayo* in morning flag raising ceremonies.[27] Local flags were allowed for some areas such as the Philippines, Indonesia, and Manchukuo.[28] [29] [30] In Korea which was part of the Empire of Japan, the Hinomaru and other symbols were used to declare that the Koreans were subjects of the empire.[31]

To the Japanese, the Hinomaru was the "Rising Sun flag that would light the darkness of the entire world."[32] To Westerners, it was one of the Japanese military's most powerful symbols.[33]

U.S. occupation

The Hinomaru is lowered in Seoul, Korea, on September 9, 1945, the day of the surrender.

The Hinomaru was the de facto flag throughout World War II and the occupation period.[21] During the occupation of Japan after World War II, permission from the Supreme Commander of the Allied Powers (SCAPJ) was needed to fly the Hinomaru.[34][35] Sources differ on the degree to which the use of the Hinomaru flag was restricted; some use the term "banned;"[36][37] however, while the original restrictions were severe, they did not amount to an outright ban.[21]

After World War II, an ensign was used by Japanese civil ships of the United States Naval Shipping Control Authority for Japanese Merchant Marines.[38] Modified from the

"E" signal code, the ensign was used from September 1945 until the U.S. occupation of Japan ceased.[39] U.S. ships operating in Japanese waters used a modified "O" signal flag as their ensign.[40]

On May 2, 1947, General Douglas MacArthur lifted the restrictions on displaying the Hinomaru in the grounds of the National Diet Building, on the Imperial Palace, on the Prime Minister's residence and on the Supreme Court building with the ratification of the newConstitution of Japan.[41][42] Those restrictions were further relaxed in 1948, when people were allowed to fly the flag on national holidays. In January 1949, the restrictions were abolished and anyone could fly the Hinomaru at any time without permission. As a result, schools and homes were encouraged to fly the Hinomaru until the early 1950s.[34]

The Hinomaru being raised at theUnited Nations headquarters in New York City in 1956

Since World War II, Japan's flag has been criticized for its association with the country's militaristic past. Similar objections have also been raised to the current national anthem of Japan, Kimigayo.[14] The feelings about the Hinomaru and Kimigayo represented a general shift from a patriotic feeling about "Dai Nippon" – Great Japan – to the pacifist and anti-militarist "Nihon". Because of this ideological shift, the flag was used less often in Japan directly after the war even though restrictions were lifted by the SCAPJ in 1949.[35][43]

As Japan began to re-establish itself diplomatically, the Hinomaru was used as a political weapon overseas. In a visit by the Emperor Hirohito and the Empress Kōjun to theNetherlands, the Hinomaru was burned by Dutch citizens who demanded that either he be sent home to Japan or tried for the deaths of Dutch prisoners of war during the Second World War.[44] Domestically, the flag was not even used in protests against a new Status of Forces Agreement being negotiated between U.S. and Japan. The most common flag used by the trade unions and other protesters was the red flag of revolt.[45]

An issue with the Hinomaru and national anthem was raised once again when Tokyo hosted the 1964 Summer Olympic Games. Before the Olympic Games, the size of the sun disc of the national flag was changed partly because the sun disc was not considered striking when it was being flown with other national flags.[35] Tadamasa Fukiura, a color specialist, chose to set the sun disc at two thirds of the flag's length. Fukiura also chose the flag colors for the 1964 as well as the 1998 Winter Olympics in Nagano.[46]

In 1989, the death of Emperor Hirohito once again raised moral issues about the national flag. Conservatives felt that if the flag could be used during the ceremonies without reopening old wounds, they might have a chance to propose that the Hinomaru become the national flag without being challenged about its meaning.[47] During an official six-day mourning period, flags were flown at half staff or draped in black bunting all across Japan.[48] Despite reports of protesters vandalizing the Hinomaru on the day of the Emperor's funeral,[49] schools' right to fly the Japanese flag at half-staff without reservations brought success to the conservatives.[47]

Since 1999

The Law Regarding the National Flag and National Anthem as it appears in the Official Gazette on August 15, 1999

The Law Regarding the National Flag and National Anthem was passed in 1999, choosing both the Hinomaru and Kimigayo as Japan's national symbols. The passage of the law stemmed from a suicide of the principal of Sera High School in Sera, Hiroshima, Ishikawa Toshihiro, who could not resolve a dispute between his school board and his teachers over the use of the Hinomaru and Kimigayo.[50][51] The Act is one of the most controversial laws passed by the Diet since the 1992 "Law Concerning Cooperation for United Nations Peacekeeping Operations and Other Operations", also known as the "International Peace Cooperation Law".[52]

Prime Minister Keizō Obuchi of the Liberal Democratic Party (LDP) decided to draft legislation to make the Hinomaru and Kimigayo official symbols of Japan in 2000. His Chief Cabinet Secretary, Hiromu Nonaka, wanted the legislation to be completed by the 10th anniversary of Emperor Akihito's enthronement.[53] This is not the first time legislation was considered for establishing both symbols as official. In 1974, with the backdrop of the 1972 return of Okinawa to Japan and the 1973 oil crisis, Prime Minister Tanaka Kakuei hinted at a law being passed enshrining both symbols in the law of Japan.[54] In addition to instructing the schools to teach and play Kimigayo, Kakuei wanted students to raise the Hinomaru flag in a ceremony every morning, and to adopt a moral curriculum based on certain elements of the Imperial Rescript on Education pronounced by theMeiji Emperor in 1890.[55] Kakuei was unsuccessful in passing the law through the Diet that year.[56]

Main supporters of the bill were the LDP and the Komeito (CGP), while the opposition included the Social Democratic Party (SDPJ) and Communist Party (JCP), who cited the connotations both symbols had with the war era. The CPJ was further opposed for not allowing the issue to be decided by the public. Meanwhile, the Democratic Party of Japan (DPJ) could not develop party consensus on it. DPJ President and future prime minister Naoto Kan stated that the DPJ must support the bill because the party already recognized both symbols as the symbols of Japan.[57] Deputy Secretary General and future prime minister Yukio Hatoyama thought that this bill would cause further divisions among society and the public schools. Hatoyama voted for the bill while Kan voted against it.[53]

Before the vote, there were calls for the bills to be separated at the Diet. Waseda University professor Norihiro Kato stated that Kimigayo is a separate issue more complex than the Hinomaru flag.[58] Attempts to designate only the Hinomaru as the national flag by the DPJ and other parties during the vote of the bill were rejected by the Diet.[59]The House of Representatives passed the bill on July 22, 1999, by a 403 to 86 vote.[60] The legislation was sent to the House of Councilors on July 28 and was passed on August 9. It was enacted into law on August 13.[61]

On August 8, 2009, a photograph was taken at a DPJ rally for the House of Representatives election showing a banner that was hanging from a ceiling. The banner was made of two Hinomaru flags cut and sewn together to form the shape of the DPJ logo. This infuriated the LDP and Prime Minister Tarō Asō, saying this act was unforgivable. In response, DPJ President Yukio Hatoyama (who voted for the Law Regarding the National Flag and National Anthem)[53] said that the banner was not the Hinomaru and should not be regarded as such.[62]

Design

Construction sheet

Passed in 1870, the Prime Minister's Proclamation No. 57 had two provisions related to the national flag. The first provision specified who flew the flag and how it was flown; the second specified how the flag was made.[7] The ratio was seven units width and ten units length (7:10). The red disc, which represents the sun, was calculated to be three-fifths of the hoist width. The law decreed the disc to be in the center, but it was usually placed one-hundredth ($1/100$) towards the hoist.[63][64] On October 3 of the same year, regulations about the design of the merchant ensign and other naval flags were passed.[65] For the merchant flag, the ratio was two units width and three units length (2:3). The size of the disc remained the same, however the sun disc was placed one-twentieth ($1/20$) towards the hoist.[66]
When the Law Regarding the National Flag and National Anthem passed, the dimensions of the flag were slightly altered.[1] The overall ratio of the flag was changed to two units width by three units length (2:3). The red disc was shifted towards dead center, but the overall size of the disc stayed the same.[2] The background of the flag is white and the sun disc is red (beni iro?), but the exact color shades were not defined in the 1999 law.[1] The only hint given about the red color that it is a "deep" shade.[67]
Issued by the Japan Defense Agency (now the Ministry of Defense) in 1973 (Showa 48), specifications list the red color of the flag as 5R 4/12 and the white as N9 in theMunsell color chart.[68] The document was changed on March 21, 2008 (Heisei 20) to match the flag's construction with current legislation and updated the Munsell colors. The document lists acrylic fiber and nylonas fibers that could be used in construction of flags used by the military. For acrylic, the red color is 5.7R 3.7/15.5 and white is N9.4; nylon has 6.2R 4/15.2 for red and N9.2 for white.[68] In a document issued by theOfficial Development Assistance (ODA), the red color for the Hinomaru and the ODA logo is listed as DIC 156 and CMYK 0-100-90-0.[69] During deliberations about the Law Regarding the National Flag and National Anthem, there was a suggestion to either use a bright red (aka iro?) shade or from the color pool of the Japanese Industrial Standards.[70]

The blazon (heraldic description) of the flag is Argent, a bezant Gules.

Use and customs

An example of a Hinomaru Yosegaki

When the Hinomaru was first introduced, the government required citizens to greet the Emperor with the flag. There was some resentment among the Japanese over the flag, resulting in some protests. It took some time for the flag to gain acceptance among the people.[19]

During World War II in Japanese culture, it was a popular custom for friends, classmates, and relatives of a deploying soldier to sign a Hinomaru and present it to him. The flag was also used as a good luck charm and a prayer to wish the soldier back safely from battle. One term for this kind of charm is Hinomaru Yosegaki (?).[76] One tradition is that no writing should touch the sun disc.[77] After battles, these flags were often captured or later found on deceased Japanese soldiers. While these flags became souvenirs,[77] there has been a growing trend of sending the signed flags back to the descendants of the soldier.[78]

The tradition of signing the Hinomaru as a good luck charm still continues, though in a limited fashion. The Hinomaru Yosegaki could be shown at sporting events to give support to the Japanese national team.[79] Another example is the hachimaki headband, which was white in color and had the red sun in the middle. During World War II, the phrases "Certain Victory" (Hisshō?) or "Seven Lives" was written on the hachimaki and worn by kamikaze pilots. This denoted that the pilot was willing to die for his country.[80]

holidays.[21] Since the war, the display of the flag of Japan is mostly limited to buildings attached to national and local governments such as city halls; it is rarely seen at private homes or commercial buildings,[21] but some people and companies have advocated displaying the flag on holidays. Although the government of Japan encourages citizens and residents to fly the Hinomaru during national holidays, they are not legally required to do so.[81][82] Since the Emperor's 80th Birthday on December 23, 2002, the Kyushu Railway Company has displayed the*Hinomaru* at 330 stations.[83]

Starting in 1995, the ODA has used the Hinomaru motif in their official logo. The design itself was not created by the government (the logo was chosen from 5,000 designs submitted by the public) but the government was trying increase the visualization of the Hinomaru through their aid packages and development programs. According to the ODA, the use of the flag is the most effective way to symbolize aid provided by the Japanese people.[84]

Culture and perception

According to polls conduced by mainstream media, most Japanese people had perceived the flag of Japan as the national flag even before the passage of the Law Regarding the National Flag and National Anthem in 1999.[85] Despite this, controversies surrounding the use of the flag in school events or media still remain. For example, liberal newspapers such as Asahi Shimbun and Mainichi Shimbun often feature articles critical of the flag of Japan, reflecting their readerships' political spectrum.[86] To other Japanese, the flag represents the time where democracy was suppressed when Japan was an empire.[87]

The display of the Hinomaru at homes and businesses is also debated in Japanese society. Because of the association of the Hinomaru with uyoku dantai (right wing) activists,reactionary politics, or hooliganism, some homes and businesses do not fly the flag.[21] There is no requirement to fly the flag on any national holiday or special events. The town of Kanazawa, Ishikawa, has proposed plans in September 2012 to use government funds to buy flags with the purpose of encouraging citizens to fly the flag on national holidays.[88] The Japanese Communist Party is vocally against the flag.

Negative perceptions of the Hinomaru exist in former colonies of Japan as well as within Japan itself, such as in Okinawa. In one notable example of this, on October 26, 1987, an Okinawan supermarket owner burned the Hinomaru before the start of the National Sports Festival of Japan.[89] The flag burner, Shōichi Chibana, burned the Hinomaru not only to show opposition to atrocities committed by the Japanese army and the continued presence of U.S. forces, but also to prevent it from being displayed in public.[90] Other incidents in Okinawa included the flag being torn down during school ceremonies and students refusing to honor the flag as it was being raised to the sounds of Kimigayo.[22] In the capital city of Naha, Okinawa, the*Hinomaru* was raised for the first time since the return of Okinawa to Japan to celebrate the city's 80th anniversary in 2001.[91] In the People's Republic of China and South Korea, both of which had been occupied by the Empire of Japan, the 1999 formal adoption of the Hinomaru was met with reactions of Japan moving towards the right and also a step towards re-militarization. The passage of the 1999 law also coincided with the debates about the status of the Yasukuni Shrine, US-Japan military cooperation and the creation of a missile defense program. In other nations that Japan occupied, the 1999 law was met with mixed reactions or glossed over. In Singapore, the older generation still harbors ill feelings toward the flag while the younger generation does not hold similar views. The Philippines government not only believed that Japan was not going to revert to militarism, but the goal of the 1999 law was to formally establish two symbols (the flag and anthem) in law and every state has a right to create national symbols.[92] Japan has no law criminalizing the burning of the Hinomaru, but foreign flags cannot be burned in Japan.[93][94] Some people have humorously drawn an analogy between the Japanese flag and the appearance of a menstruation stain on a white bedsheet.[95]

Protocol

Diagram published with Regulation 1 from 1912 (Raising Mourning Flag for the Emperor).

According to protocol, the flag may fly from sunrise until sunset; businesses and schools are permitted to fly the flag from opening to closing.[96] When flying the flags of Japan and another country at the same time, the Japanese flag takes the position of honor and the flag of the guest country flies to its right. Both flags must be at the same height and of equal size. When more than one foreign flag is displayed, Japan's flag is arranged in the alphabetical order prescribed by the United Nations.[97] When the flag becomes unsuitable to use, it is customarily burned in private.[96] The Law Regarding the National Flag and Anthem does not specify on how the flag should be used, but different prefectures came up with their own regulations to use the Hinomaru and other prefectural flags.[98][99]

Mourning

The Hinomaru flag has at least two mourning styles. One is to display the flag at half-staff (Han-ki), as is common in many countries. The offices of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs also hoist the flag at half-staff when a funeral is performed for a foreign nation's head of state.[100]

An alternative mourning style is to wrap the spherical finial with black cloth and place a black ribbon, known as a mourning flag (Chō-ki), above the flag. This style dates back to the death of Emperor Meiji on July 30, 1912, and the Cabinet issued an ordinance stipulating that the national flag should be raised in mourning when the Emperor dies.[101] The Cabinet has the authority to announce the half-staffing of the national flag.[102]

Public schools

Since the end of World War II, the Ministry of Education has issued statements and regulations to promote the usage of both the Hinomaru and Kimigayo at schools under their jurisdiction. The first of these statements was released in 1950, stating that it was desirable, but not required, to use both symbols. This desire was later expanded to include both symbols on national holidays and during ceremonial events to encourage students on what national holidays are and to promote defense education.[35] In a 1989 reform of the education guidelines, the LDP-controlled government first demanded that the flag must be used in school ceremonies and that proper respect must be given to it and to*Kimigayo*.[103] Punishments for school officials who did not follow this order were also enacted with the 1989 reforms.[35]

The 1999 curriculum guideline issued by the Ministry of Education after the passage of the Law Regarding the National Flag and Anthem decrees that "on entrance and graduation ceremonies, schools must raise the flag of Japan and instruct students to sing the "Kimigayo" (national anthem), given the significance of the flag and the song."[104]Additionally, the ministry's commentary on the 1999 curriculum guideline for elementary schools note that "given the advance of internationalization, along with fostering patriotism and awareness of being Japanese, it is important to nurture school children's respectful attitude toward the flag of Japan and Kimigayo as they grow up to be respected Japanese citizens in an internationalized society."[105] The ministry also stated that if Japanese students cannot respect their own symbols, then they will not be able to respect the symbols of other nations.[106]

Schools have been the center of controversy over both the anthem and the national flag.[36] The Tokyo Board of Education requires the use of both the anthem and flag at events under their jurisdiction. The order requires school teachers to respect both symbols or risk losing their jobs.[107] Some have protested that such rules violate theConstitution of Japan, but the Board has argued that since schools are government agencies, their employees have an obligation to teach their students how to be good Japanese citizens.[14] As a sign of protest, schools refused to display the Hinomaru at school graduations and some parents ripped down the flag.[36] Teachers have unsuccessfully brought criminal complaints against Tokyo Governor Shintarō Ishihara and senior officials for ordering teachers to honor the Hinomaru and Kimigayo.[108] After earlier opposition, the Japan Teachers Union accepts the use of both the flag and anthem; the smaller All Japan Teachers and Staffs Union still opposes both symbols and their use inside the school system.[109]

a version of the sun disc design with eight red rays extending outward, called Hachijō-Kyokujitsuki (?). A gold border lies partially around the edge.[3]
A well-known variant of the sun disc design is the sun disc with 16 red rays in a Siemens star formation, which was also historically used by Japan's military, particularly the Imperial Japanese Army and the Imperial Japanese Navy. The ensign, known in Japanese as the Jyūrokujō-Kyokujitsu-ki (?), was first adopted as the War flag on May 15, 1870, and was used until the end of World War II in 1945. It was re-adopted on June 30, 1954, and is now used as the war flag and naval ensign of the Japan Ground Self-Defense Force (JGSDF) and the Japan Maritime Self-Defense Force (JMSDF).[3] In the surrounding Asian countries that were occupied by Japan, this flag still carries a negative connotation.[110] The JMSDF also employs the use of a masthead pennant. First adopted in 1914 and readopted in 1965, the masthead pennant contains a simplified version of the naval ensign at the hoist end, with the rest of the pennant colored white. The ratio of the pennant is between 1:40 and 1:90.[111]
The Japan Air Self-Defense Force (JASDF), established independently in 1952, has only the plain sun disc as its emblem.[112] This is the only branch of service with an emblem that does not invoke the rayed Imperial Standard. However, the branch does have an ensign to fly on bases and during parades. The ensign was created in 1972, which was the third used by the JASDF since its creation. The ensign contains the emblem of the branch centered on a blue background.[113]
Although not an official national flag, the Z signal flag played a major role in Japanese naval history. On May 27, 1905, Admiral Heihachirō Tōgō of the Mikasa was preparing to engage the Russian Baltic Fleet. Before the Battle of Tsushima began, Togo raised the Z flag on the Mikasa and engaged the Russian fleet, winning the battle for Japan. The raising of the flag said to the crew the following: "The fate of Imperial Japan hangs on this one battle; all hands will exert themselves and do their best." The Z flag was also raised on the aircraft carrier Akagi on the eve of the Japan's attack on Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, in December 1941.[114]

The standard of the Japanese Emperor

Starting in 1870, flags were created for the Japanese Emperor (then Emperor Meiji), the Empress, and for other members of the imperial family.[115] At first, the Emperor's flag was ornate, with a sun resting in the center of an artistic pattern. He had flags that were used on land, at sea, and when he was in a carriage. The imperial family was also granted flags to be used at sea and while on land (one for use on foot and one carriage flag). The carriage flags were a monocolored chrysanthemum, with 16 petals, placed in the center of a monocolored background.[65] These flags were discarded in 1889 when the Emperor decided to use the chrysanthemum on a red background as his flag. With minor changes in the color shades and proportions, the flags adopted in 1889 are still in use by the imperial family.[116][117]

The current Emperor's flag is a 16-petal chrysanthemum, colored in gold, centered on a red background with a 2:3 ratio. The Empress uses the same flag, except the shape is that of a swallow tail. The crown prince and the crown princess use the same flags, except with a smaller chrysanthemum and a white border in the middle of the flags.[118] The chrysanthemum has been associated with the Imperial throne since the rule of Emperor Go-Toba in the 12th century, but it did not become the exclusive symbol of the Imperial throne until 1868.[115]

Subnational flags

The Japanese flag flying with the flags of Okinawa Prefecture and Urasoe City

Each of Japan's 47 prefectures has a flag resembling the national flag insofar as consisting of a symbol, called a mon, charged on a monocolored field (with the exception of Ehime, which uses a symbol on a bicolor background).[119] There are several prefecture flags, such as Hiroshima's, that match their specifications to the national flag (2:3 ratio,mon placed in the center and is 3/5 the length of the flag).[120] Some of the mon display the name of the prefecture in Japanese characters; others are stylized depictions of the location or another special feature of the prefecture. An example of a prefectural flag is that of Nagano, where the orange katakana character (na) appears in the center of a white disc. One interpretation of the mon is that the na symbol represents a mountain and the white disc, a lake. The orange color represents the sun while the white color represents the snow of the region.[121]

Municipalities can also adopt flags of their own. The designs of the city flags are similar to the prefectural flags: a mon on a monocolored background. An example is the flag ofAmakusa in Kumamoto Prefecture: the city symbol is composed of the Katakana character (a) and surrounded by waves.[122] This symbol is centered on a white flag, with a ratio of 1:1.5.[123] Both the city emblem and the flag were adopted in 2006.[123]

Derivatives

Former Japan Post flag (1872–1887)

In addition to the flags used by the military, several other flag designs were inspired by the national flag. The former Japan Post flag consisted of the Hinomaru with a red horizontal bar placed in the center of the flag. There was also a thin white ring around the red sun. It was later replaced by a flag that consisted of the postal mark in red on a white background.[124]
Two recently designed national flags resemble the Japanese flag. In 1971, Bangladesh gained independence from Pakistan, and it adopted a national flag that had a green background, charged with an off-centered red disc that contained a golden map of Bangladesh. The current flag, adopted in 1972, dropped the golden map and kept everything else. The Government of Bangladesh officially calls the red disc a circle;[125] the red color symbolizes the blood that was shed to create their country.[126] The island nation of Palau uses a flag of similar design, but the color scheme is completely different. While the Government of Palau does not cite the Japanese flag as an influence on their national flag, Japan did administer Palau from 1914 until 1944.[127] The flag of Palau is an off-centered golden-yellow full moon on a sky blue background.[128] The moon stands for peace and a young nation while the blue background represents Palau's transition to self-government from 1981 to 1994, when it achieved full independence.[129]
The Japanese naval ensign also influenced other flag designs. One such flag design is used by the Asahi Shimbun. At the bottom hoist of the flag, one quarter of the sun is displayed. The kanji character is displayed on the flag, colored white, covering most of the sun. The rays extend from the sun, occurring in a red and white alternating order, culminating in 13 total stripes.[130][131]The flag is commonly seen at the National High School Baseball Championship, as the Asahi Shimbun is a main sponsor of the tournament.[132] The rank flags and ensigns of the Imperial Japanese Navy also based their designs on the naval ensign.[133]

Subject: child support order recieved in mail and your office protecting a criminal using the family system to commit fraud and criminal offenses

Dear Mr. Steve Wolfson< District Attorney;

I Peter Deiana in proper person, refuse from this day forward to be bullied, threatened and treated with such a disgusting disregard to my civil and constitutional rights by your office, the family court system as a whole and the attorneys that continuously get well compensated for openly helping their clients that have the financial means to hire these dirtbags commit serious offenses; criminal offenses and hide them from prosecution under the cover of the family courts. Now this isn't true for all litigants; It stands true if you are of the female sex you very easily can get away with serious serious criminal offenses, offenses that carry felony d and worse charges! In my particular cases (plural) the justice system we know as family courts has failed me twice. completely ruined my life to where i've contemplated taking my own life. both these women have committed serious criminal offenses against myself your office and the courts. I have more than enough proof; I have presented my obligation of proof in the first case with Rebecca Deiana, Stiltz, and whatever she has changed her name to now, Hinkle I believe. Multiple jurisdictions multiple courts multiple child support offices multiple counties and states and always the legal system fails to take responsibility and do what they are obligated to do.... RIGHT THE WRONGS AND PUNISH THE CRIMINALS> It has been shown to me over and over again that the judges that have been elected to their benches fail us as men over and over and over again because it is much easier for them to continue their careers under the cover of "the norm and acceptable" then to take a stand and risk the persecution by their piers then to believe that the things that I and i'm sure 1000's o other men have accused these women of doing; THAT IN FACT THESE WOMEN ARE

VERY CAPABLE OF COMMITTING THESE GROSS AND COMPLETE LACKING OF REMORSE AND MORAL STANDARDS IF ANY STANDARDS AT ALL!!! Somebody needs to take a stand and change your spineless practices and start prosecuting these women and judges and attorneys that are ruining; completely ruining countless lives day in and day out and at day end never giving them another thought as the add to our homeless, add to our drug addiction epidemic, add to the horrible rise in suicides and worse of all add the number of children that grow up without a father, when the father wanted nothing more than to be a father to that child and the growing number of our youth that are suffering from mental instability issues handed down from you officials showing total disregard to the long term consequences of your actions. When did we stop caring about what was right and wrong and right in front of our faces and start ruining lives because this book says here says such and such is the only scenario possible and this party should always be given no doubt to the statements being true. Over the last six to seven months I have studied so much on family law and scenarios that are documented as case study and opinions and turned into the bible on how to deal with certain offenses, to the point that nobody has to think nobody has to use common sense just open the book and the book will cast a shadow on the offending party and on with the ruining of lives we go. so much studying it literally made me sick to see how many regulations and statues as case studies and laws where written and published being completely sexiest and against the man from beginning to end. That is what got us here today, it started a movement by these women that should be stripped of their parental rights for doing these acts toward and directly affecting the innocent children the family courts says they act in the best interest of. Completely not A TRUE STATEMENT ON THE COURTS PART. iF i CAN TAKE THE N.R.S THAT EXPRESSES HOW THE SYSTEM SHOULD COME TO THEIR CONCLUSION ON THE BEST INTEREST OF CHILD, AND I can with out a doubt that these women especially Ashley have violated ever one of the regulating factors of these guidelines and ultimately gets ignored and swept aside by rebuttals of complete lies false allegations and perjury and all out fraud. Well I am going to be making that stand myself!!! I WILL NOT GO ALONG WITH EITHER COURT ORDER OF SUPPORT FROM THIS DAY FORWARD. Instead I will be continuing this front against both parties, the courts and the lawyers at fault for letting these behaviors and actions continue on without consequence but with out a doubt is ruining countless amounts of lives day in and day out. This needs to change. I have written a great number of emails to a great number of agencies and offices about the specifics of my current case or onset of false allegations, false police reports, crimes against my person and crimes against public, perjury, fraud upon the courts, fraudulently presenting herself as a victim of specific domestic violence acts that she Ashley, actually committed against myself in the direct presence of my children, child abduction and serious onset of alienation.Alienation of affection; a multiple year onslot of alienation delivered by my wifes mother directly and personally. And more, all provable, most are very obvious. obvious and very provable case of multi state criminal conspiracy involving a minimum of 5 individuals which includes but not limited to false testimonies/willingness to provide false testimonies, to do with false criminal allegations to gain imprisonment of myself and judgements in my wife's favor. including my wife's attorney, her brother her mother her father her friend and our babysitter Jamie Houston resident of enterprise, southern highlands in southern las vegas and runs a day care that is past legal capacity on most days in reference to license, employees, space and number of children. Her brother Rob Mcclelland resides in albuquerque new mexico, Mother and father Kathi and Bob McClelland from Tucumcari, new mexico and own 2 pharmacys and is currently under their second serious investigation by the pharmacy board for illegal practices and distributions of controlled and dangerous drugs. It should be known I am a main witness and have provided a great deal of evidence in this case with the pharmacy board of new mexico and these people know this to be true and I propose a threat to their fraudulent and illegal lifestyle. Attorney is Gary Zernich and is very privy to all this information and knows it to be true and has taken a personal interest toward destroying my character and continues to help his client in her hidden and illegal agendas. Now know all these statements to be very true and that I do hold evidence and proof to all accusations i have made in this statement and all others I have written and will continuously write and distribute thru out until Justice; true justice prevails. And I will take this to the upper courts and will continue to insist somebody of authority stands up and takes charge and these individuals are rightfully charged and prosecuted with the criminal charges they deserve and my children are reunited with me and my civil, personal and constitutional rights are no longer being violated. I will not tolerate being illegally and fraudulently being stripped of my rights to a father/child relationship for 6-7 months now; completely denied over 600 attempts at visitation will also being abused under the cover of the family courts. And I definitely will not fund these women's fraudulent and illegal activities with $1600.00 a month in judgements against me. I havent made $1600.00 a month in at least the last 3 months!!!! and recently find myself unemployed. Even though my wifes reward from success in her agendas against me is becoming a million aire (no longer cut off from family money and inheratances by her mother) I will have no argument to taking care of my responsibilities but not under these circumstances. I will prevail in complete reversals in both cases. If you feel that it proves a point or somehow helps or fixes anything by putting me in jail, then so be it. I will add wrongful imprisonment to the fight and will immediately continue my fights for justice against the unbelievable actions of these women the second and every time I am released.

Thank you in advance,
Pete Deiana

Las Vegas Lawyer to Sue Opioid Manufacturers

The Clark County Commission unanimously approved hiring the Las Vegas law firm, Eglet Prince, to sue prescription drug makers over the opioid epidemic.

Representing the firm on State of Nevada, personal injury attorney Robert Eglet says 90's drug makers marketed a new generation of opiate drugs as having a low-risk of addiction, which they don't. Doctors were told they could prescribe a three-month of supply to patients with chronic pain who had been coming to their office month after month. But in reality, the drugs are highly addictive and withdrawal from them can be difficult.

"Here in our community it is much worse than it is around the rest of the country," he says, "It's a huge problem that was no question caused by these pharmaceutical companies."

It is a start. Thanks. One answer may be in doubt and that is the question of home grow. The ballot questtion seems clear on that to me but I am told that there is more enabling language somewhere which puts a 25 mile limit on proximity to a dispensary which would prohibit it. Seems to me the plain language of the Question should control so I am confused.

Karen: Please look into that one thing for now, please?

Good afternoon Ms. Duddlesten,
Councilman Coffin wanted a briefing on the passage of Ballot Question 2 that was just passed by the Nevada voters.
Absent any Bills introduced at the next Nevada Legislative Session, Councilman Coffin would still like a briefing as soon as possible.

As of January 1, 2017, it would be legal for anyone 21 and older to possess an ounce of marijuana or an eighth of an ounce of marijuana concentrate.
Correct? That is our understanding. The CAO should provide details.

An adult may grow up to six plants for personal use inside their home? YES, that is our understanding, however there is also a cap of 12 plants per household.
Correct? Will this be added for Code Enforcement to enforce? This is yet to be determined.

Who's in charge of legalized marijuana regulations-the Department of Taxation or Department of Health? The Department of Taxation. They have not yet staffed the new department but Joline Smith, 775-684-2029 may have more information.

Would city licensing fees be increased on recreational as opposed to medical dispensaries? This is yet to be determined and would have to be addressed both in enabling legislation or local ordinance.

What is the mechanism for medical to convert to recreational sales? This will need to be determined on temporary state regulations and local ordinances.

Has the state of Nevada decided how to divide the reported 80-recreational licenses that would be made available? Not to our knowledge.

Is it true that for the first 18 months, only existing medical marijuana establishments could apply to open recreational dispensaries? Yes, the Act states that only those medical marijuana establishments that hold a State Registrations Certificate may apply for a recreational license. (does not stipulate that they are licensed in their respective jurisdiction)

Define existing (licensed, built or in process). – No information available at this time as the Act only mentions State Registration Certificates.

Is city staff prepared with licensing regulations, staffing, and enforcement? We have been working with Senator Farley on the issues that may be addressed in additional legislation and have a staff working group preparing issues that will require input and direction from the CAO, CMO and City Council.

Since this will move fast on January 1, 2017, whatever briefing you can put together would be greatly appreciated. The State has 12 months from Jan 1, 2017 to start accepting applications. The Department of Taxation issued a press release that they would be working on temporary regulations. We have made contact at both the legislative level and the Department to request to be involved in discussions.

Thank you in advance.

Showing tribute of any kind to a drug addict is the most ridiculous thing your administration has come up with yet. The man was a good artist which he was paid highly for.
This is not someone I want my grandchildren to look up to. He killed himself! With Drugs!! This is how you wish to inspire the youth of our town. Your tribute is encouraging young people to follow in the footsteps of a drug addict!!
How sad you have decided to drag our town down a road of star idol worship instead of doing for and celebrating our military heroes. Shame on you. I am embarrassed for us all. Karleen Craig

Subject: Former inmate IDs

Quote of the Day

"When we take all identification away from an offender, how do they get a place to stay? How do they get a hotel without identification? They can't. How do you get the resources, get into community programs without any identification or even get your pharmaceutical drugs that you need for treatment?"

— Prisons Director James Dzurenda

From the Editors

Did you know that more than half of the prison inmates released in Nevada have no identification at that point? And therefore cannot check into a hotel or motel, get hired at most places of employment, access most local or state services, open a bank account, get anything done at the DMV, or so much as check out a book at a library? The Senate Judiciary Committee learned all this last week.

Mayor Goodman,

Here is the statement you requested from the Sheriff.

The Las Vegas Metropolitan Police Department had the Force Investigation Team investigate the deadly use of force case involving former LVMPD Officer Ken Lopera which resulted in the death of Tashi Brown. The criminal investigation resulted in a referral to the District Attorney for prosecution of Lopera. The case was approved by the District Attorney and the District Attorney subsequently brought the case to the Clark County Grand Jury.
Today we learned that the Grand Jury chose not to indict Lopera. This case continues to be in the hands of the Clark County District Attorney and the court system.
Former Officer Ken Lopera separated from the LVMPD in 2017.

Respectfully,

Assistant Sheriff Tim Kelly

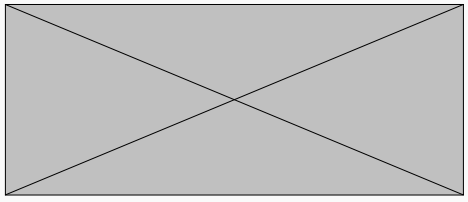
Issue 115 - October 17th, 2017

Making the Rounds with Founding Dean Dr. Barbara Atkinson

FLU SEASON IS HERE, CONSIDER A FLU VACCINE!

Protect yourself, your family and your patients from the flu by becoming vaccinated this season with an annual flu vaccine. While the timing of flu season is unpredictable, seasonal flu activity can begin as early as October and continue as late as May. CDC recommends that people 6 months of age and older recieve a vaccination by the end of October, if possible.



While the impact of flu varies, it places a substantial burden on the health of people in the United States each year. CDC estimates that influenza has resulted in between 9.2 million and 35.6 million illnesses, between 140,000 and 710,000 hospitalizations and between 12,000 and 56,000 deaths annually since 2010.

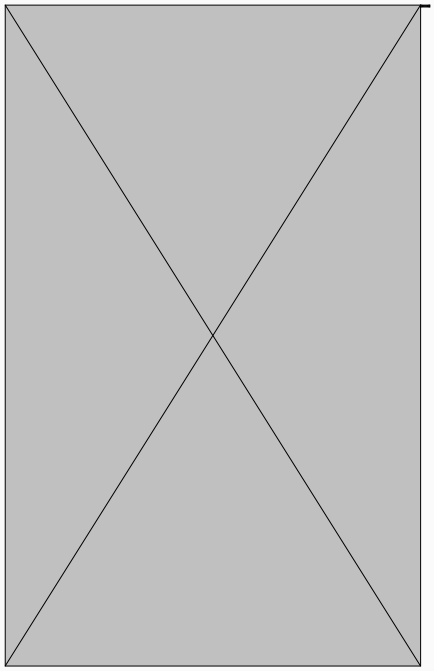
Not only can it reduce flu illness, but it can also reduce doctor's visits and missed work and school. While some think flu is akin to a "bad cold," it's something altogether different and far more serious. Influenza (flu) is a contagious respiratory illness caused by influenza viruses, and it can cause mild to severe illness. To emphasize the gravity of flu, it's important to keep a few facts and figures in mind (from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention).

- More than 200,000 Americans are hospitalized and thousands die every year from the influenza virus.
- Flu causes 38 million lost school days and 111 million lost workdays a year, resulting in more than $7 billion in lost wages.
- About 20,000 children under 5 are hospitalized each year from the flu.
- During the 2016-2017 flu season, 104 pediatric deaths were reported across the United States.



"Years of research have shown vaccination is the best way to prevent influenza - for ourselves, our family members, and anyone we interact with in our daily lives," said Immunize Nevada Executive Director Heidi Parker in a recent telephone interview with Pam Beal, Associate Dean of Clinical Affairs. "Your flu vaccine doesn't just protect you, it also protects those at highest risk from complications, such as pregnant women, babies, seniors, and people with chronic health conditions."

Yearly flu vaccination is the best tool currently available to protect against influenza (flu), a serious disease which sickens millions of people each year. The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) recommends a yearly flu vaccination as the first and most important step in protecting against flu and its potentially serious complications. Millions of people have safely received flu vaccines for decades. Flu vaccination can reduce flu illnesses, doctors' visits, and missed work and school due to flu, as well as prevent flu-related hospitalizations.

A few things to note for this flu season:

- Flu vaccines have been updated to better match circulating flu viruses.
- For the second year, only injectable flu vaccines (flu shots) are recommended. LAIV, a nasal spray vaccine, is not recommended for use.

You can join the effort to reduce the flu in our community by getting your flu vaccine and encouraging people to protect themselves and their family by doing the same.

Flu is a serious contagious disease that can lead to hospitalization and even death. You have the power to protect yourself and your family this season with these three actions to fight flu.

1. Everyone 6 months of age and older should get a flu vaccine by the end of October, if possible. A yearly flu vaccine is the first and most important step in protecting against the flu.
2. Try to avoid close contact with sick people, and if you become sick, limit your contact with others. When possible, stay home for at least 24 hours after your fever is gone. Cover your nose and mouth with a tissue when you cough or sneeze, and wash your hands often with soap and water. If soap and water are not available, use an alcohol-based hand rub.
3. If you develop the flu, prescription medicine called antiviral drugs can be used to treat flu illness. Antiviral drugs can make illness milder and shorten the time you are sick. They may also prevent serious flu complications. Learn more about how you can prevent flu this season.

"You have the power to fight the flu - please get yourself and your family vaccinated", states Elissa Palmer, MD, FAAFP, Professor and Chair of Family Medicine at the UNLV School of Medicine, "The flu vaccine can prevent and reduce flu illnesses, doctors' visits, and missed work or school. It's a contagious disease and everyone over 6 months of age should get vaccinated every year."

MEDICINE BY THE NUMBERS – 111,000,000

Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) estimates that influenza causes 111 million lost workdays a year.

Hello Lora,

Thank you for the prompt response. I am glad that your office is working to fix this issue with local authorities as its been out of control and the experience been horrible to our customers. Will look forward for the action taken and update you with any new information in this regards. My biggest concern is Drugs being sold and the drinking outside the court house door steps by the handbillers while chasing costumers down the alleys.

The best Customer service is what we are looking for. We do no have a problem having couples choose any chapel in town as long as they have a great experience and not being chased down the alleys and being yelled at or taken advantage off.

Regards,
Ben

Good Afternoon, Mr. Silvano:

Thank you for contacting Mayor Carolyn G. Goodman. We were quite concerned about your email and investigated further. As a result, we have learned that the City's Planning Department, Clark County Marriage Bureau officials, City Marshals, and Metro Police are all also aware of and very concerned about these issues. A meeting of these entities has thus been scheduled to determine how to proceed. We are hopeful that a plan of action will emerge from that discussion which will assist legitimate wedding chapel businesses—a true staple of our community. On behalf of Mayor Goodman, thank you very much for bringing this important matter to our attention. Your interest and activism are appreciated. Please continue to write if there is additional information we should have. Again, thank you.

Your name:	Ben Silvano
Comments:	Dear Mayor Goodman, I would like to bring to your attention a huge problem we are facing in the Wedding Chapel business here in City of las vegas. The Handbill people at the doors of the marriage bureau are causing us alot of problems and issues. Customers are coming into our chapel terrified or cheated or taken advantage off from the handbillers. They are chasing them down the street and jumping all over them eventhough the couple informed them they had a chapel. We had incidents where they chased them down to our door steps! in addition chapels have been price manipulating and cheating the customers to just rip them off inside. Also we recently found out therr have been drug sales on the doors of the court house by the handbillers. Drugs such as weed,zanax and other strong drugs. Someone has to take charge and fix this issue as its bringing a bad reputation to the marriage business in Las Vegas and therefore a large drop in marriage licenses are being issued every year. Today there was an incident with Sierra one of the promoters that chased the couple down the street shouting and yelling at them because they didnt go with her. How is that customer service? Any help in finding a solution would be great as the only time the handbillers are following the rules is when a marshal is present and the moment he leaves they go back to their bad habbits.

Hi Mayor! Two years ago (yes he kept the email!) Jon Ralston asked us about this whether you were considering returning the money he gave your campaign, and after talking with you we responded you were aware of the issue and would wait and see what the outcome of the investigation is, Now that he has been indicted Jon wants to know whether you are planning to return the money he donated to your campaign.
Feel free to call me if you want to chat, I wanted to email you this so you had the PDF.

INVESTMENT COMPANY EXECUTIVES INDICTED FOR $1.5 BILLION PONZI SCHEME

WASHINGTON – The president and chief executive officer and two former Asia-based executives of a Las Vegas investment company were indicted today for their roles in an alleged $1.5 billion Ponzi scheme.

Assistant Attorney General Leslie R. Caldwell of the Justice Department's Criminal Division, U.S. Attorney Daniel G. Bogden of the District of Nevada and Special Agent in Charge Laura A. Bucheit of the FBI's Las Vegas Division made the announcement.

"The defendants allegedly preyed on thousands of unsuspecting Japanese victims to enrich themselves by operating a billion-plus dollar Ponzi scheme," said Assistant Attorney General Caldwell. "This prosecution shows that the Criminal Division will pursue not only those who victimize American citizens, but also those who use the U.S. as a home base to defraud victims abroad."

"Investment fraud and other financial fraud cases are a high priority for the U.S. Attorney's Office in Nevada," said U.S. Attorney Bogden. "These defendants are accused of using a Nevada corporation to conduct their $1.5 billion fraud scheme and falsely telling thousands of overseas victims that their investments would be safely held and managed by an independent, third-party escrow agent in Nevada. Fraudulent ruses and schemes perpetrated by Nevadans using Nevada corporations and entities will continue to be addressed by this office."

"These indictments are a reminder of the FBI's determination to identify, investigate and bring to justice those who are committing financial crimes against innocent consumers," said Special Agent in Charge Bucheit. "We are appreciative of the continued support we receive from our international, federal, state and local law enforcement partners."

Edwin Fujinaga, 68, of Las Vegas; Junzo Suzuki, 66, of Tokyo; and Paul Suzuki, 36, of Tokyo, were charged in an indictment with eight counts of mail fraud and nine counts of wire fraud. Fujinaga also is charged with three counts of money laundering. The indictment seeks from all three defendants forfeiture of the proceeds from the alleged crimes.

Fujinaga was the president and CEO of Las Vegas-based MRI International Inc. (MRI). Junzo Suzuki previously was MRI's executive vice president for Asia Pacific, and Paul Suzuki previously was the company's general manager for Japan operations. MRI purportedly specialized in "factoring," whereby the company purchased accounts receivable from medical providers at a discount, and then attempted to recover the entire amount, or at least more than the discounted amount, from the debtor.

According to allegations in the indictment, from at least 2009 to 2013, Fujinaga and the Suzukis fraudulently solicited investments from thousands of Japanese residents, and MRI currently owes investors over $1.5 billion. Specifically, the indictment alleges that Fujinaga and the Suzukis promised investors a series of interest payments that would accrue over the life of the investment and that would be paid out along with the face value of the investment at the conclusion of the investments' duration. The defendants allegedly solicited investments by, among other things, promising investors that their investments would be used only for the purchase of medical accounts receivable (MARS) and by representing that investors funds would be managed and safeguarded by an independent third-party escrow company.

The indictment further alleges that MRI operated as a Ponzi scheme, wherein the defendants used new investors' money to pay prior investors' maturing investments. According to the indictment, the defendants also allegedly used investors' funds for purposes other than the purchase of MARS, including paying themselves sales commissions, subsidizing gambling habits, funding personal travel by private jet, and other personal expenses.

The charges contained in an indictment are merely accusations. A defendant is presumed innocent until and unless proven guilty.

This case is being investigated by the FBI's Las Vegas Division. Significant assistance was provided by the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission, the Criminal Division's Office of International Affairs and Japanese authorities. This case is being prosecuted by Assistant Chief Albert B. Stieglitz Jr. and Trial Attorney Melissa Aoyagi of the Criminal Division's Fraud Section and First Assistant U.S. Attorney Steven W. Myhre of the District of Nevada.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,

Plaintiff,

v.

EDWIN FUJINAGA,
JUNZO SUZUKI, and
PAUL SUZUKI,

Defendants.

CRIMINAL INDICTMENT

VIOLATIONS:

Title 18, United States Code, Section 1341—Mail Fraud (Counts One through Eight) (as to all defendants);

Title 18, United States Code, Section 1343—Wire Fraud (Counts Nine through Seventeen) (as to all defendants);

Title 18, United States Code, Section 1957—Engaging in Money Transactions in Property Derived from Specified Unlawful Activity (Counts Eighteen through Twenty) (as to defendant FUJINAGA); Title 18, United States Code, Section 2—Aiding and Abetting (Counts One through Twenty as to defendant FUJINAGA, Counts One through Seventeen as to defendants JUNZO SUZUKI and PAUL SUZUKI).

CLV005087

The Grand Jury Charges that at all times relevant to the Indictment:

BACKGROUND

1. Defendant Edwin FUJINAGA was a United States citizen, residing in Las Vegas, Nevada.

2. Defendant Junzo SUZUKI ("J. SUZUKI") was a Japanese citizen, residing in Tokyo, Japan.

3. Defendant Paul SUZUKI ("P. SUZUKI") was a Japanese and United States citizen, residing in Tokyo, Japan.

4. MRI International Inc. ("MRI") was a Nevada Limited Liability Corporation located and operated in Las Vegas, Nevada. Defendant FUJINAGA owned and controlled MRI as its President and CEO. MRI operated a Service Center located in Tokyo, Japan. Defendant J. SUZUKI was at various times MRI's Executive Vice President (Asia Pacific), and Defendant P. SUZUKI was at various times General Manager of MRI's Japan operations.

THE SCHEME AND ARTIFICE TO DEFRAUD

5. From at least 2009 and continuing until at least in or about April 2013, FUJINAGA, J. SUZUKI and P. SUZUKI, and others known and unknown to the Grand Jury, aided and abetted by each other, made, and caused to be made, numerous material misrepresentations and omissions designed to fraudulently induce investors to transmit money to MRI.

6. As part of the scheme and artifice, the defendants represented, among other things, that MRI was engaged in the business of purchasing medical accounts receivable

("MARS"), that is, debts owed by recipients of medical services or products to the individuals or entities that provided those services. MRI purported to purchase the accounts from providers at a discounted rate and then collect on the accounts from the patients owing money. MRI's profit from this activity, according to the defendants, was generated from the difference between the price at which MRI purchased the MARS and the amount MRI collected on them due to MRI's purportedly superior collections capability.

7. As a further part of the scheme and artifice, the defendants, and others working with them, solicited investments in MRI by offering Certificates of Investment (hereinafter "Certificates"), claiming to provide investors with consistent, predictable returns resulting from its superior collections ability. The defendants marketed and sold the Certificates primarily, if not exclusively, to Japanese citizens through MRI's Service Center in Tokyo. Bearing a face value equal to the amount of the initial investment, the Certificates promised a series of interest payments which would accrue and be paid, along with the principal, when the Certificates reached a specified maturity date. When the Certificates reached maturity, investors were given the option to reinvest the total amount due and owing into a new Certificate instead of receiving a "liquidation," or cash payment of the amount they were due.

8. As a further part of the scheme and artifice, the defendants fraudulently induced investments by knowingly publishing, mailing, distributing, and transmitting promotional materials that falsely represented that MRI would use any money invested in the Certificates exclusively to purchase MARS, the purported profitable business of MRI. The defendants also falsely represented to investors that investment money would be held and managed by an independent, third-party escrow agent in Nevada using a "lock box" method that prevented MRI, or anyone else, from expending investment money for any purpose other than the purchase of MARS. Based on these and other false and fraudulent representations and promises, the defendants induced thousands of investors to invest a total of over $1.5 billion in MRI Certificates.

9. As a further part of the scheme and artifice, and contrary to all representations the defendants made to investors, MRI functioned almost entirely as a Ponzi scheme, that is, money solicited from new investors was used to pay prior investors' maturing investments.

10. As a further part of the scheme and artifice, and contrary to all representations the defendants made to investors, the defendants regularly expended investor money for things other than purchasing MARS, including paying themselves sales commissions, subsidizing gambling habits, paying for personal travel by private jet, and other personal expenses.

11. As a further part of the scheme and artifice, the defendants made such other false, fraudulent, deceptive, and deceitful representations as necessary to advance their fraudulent scheme, conceal their fraudulent activities from others, avoid detection, enrich themselves, and cause devastating losses to their victims.

Subject: [Marketing Mail] Transition Update from ONDCP Acting Director Kemp Chester

Friends and Colleagues,

This is Kemp Chester, the Acting Director of the Office of National Drug Control Policy. As many of you know, I was designated by the President to assume this role on January 20 after former Director Michael Botticelli left ONDCP. I worked for Director Botticelli for more than a year and saw firsthand the impact he had on the people ONDCP works to help. I admire him and the work he did here greatly.

Some of you I've met and others I have not yet had the pleasure to meet but hope to do so soon. I'm reaching out today to introduce myself and to let you know that we are still working hard on behalf of the American people to address drug use and its consequences. This includes working with President Trump's team to develop his drug policy framework for our Nation going forward.

I'm excited to be leading ONDCP during this period of transition because I've spent my career working to make our country and our communities safer, and I consider it an enormous privilege to continue my public service alongside the incredibly talented and dedicated men and women of ONDCP.

At ONDCP, I've been actively involved in our policy response to the drug-related threats we face and our strategies to address them, including prevention, expanding access to treatment, and stopping the flow of drugs into and throughout our country. I've seen just how much our work depends on great partners like you - people on the ground in communities across the country including parents, advocates, public health officials, treatment providers, first responders, and law enforcement officers, as well as local, state, tribal, and Federal leaders, and so many others working tirelessly to improve the health of their communities. I admire the work you do, and please know that you have a voice and a partner in me personally, and indeed all of us here at ONDCP.

So while the President works to nominate the next Director of ONDCP, I want you to know that I am here for you. I know that Director Botticelli touched most of your lives in some way and filling his shoes is no small task. But I'll do my best, and I look forward to the opportunity to work with you all as we continue to fulfill ONDCP's mission.

Sincerely,

Kemp Chester

This dispatch prepared for .

DAYS UNTIL THE FIRST SPECIAL SESSION BEGINS: 13

Good morning, everyone. Danger, Will Robinson! I am making the trek northward this morning for the homestretch. I give you fair warning, friendly denizens of Carson City: My patience for nonsense is even lower than usual, so I may not be as congenial as you are used to seeing me. As Walter White said, tread lightly. You know who you are. You have been warned.

If you are in the capital on May 31, one week from today, Third House, the biennial satire by the media of the Legislature, will take place in the Assembly chambers at 6 PM.

What's below: PhRMA time, Morning Flash nuggets and a trivia question about a casino opening.

COMING UP

The daily bill signings have begun: Fun to see all the pics of Gov. Brian Sandoval with lawmakers, mostly Democrats, as they smile for pictures for their 2018 mail pieces. Today: Senate Bill 19, the governor's Dual Enrollment measure, and Senate Bill 241, which establishes the State Seal of STEM Program on a student's high school diploma. The signing will take place at Western Nevada College, so an even better photo op for the lucky lawmakers!

PHRMA'S LAST GASP?

The most interesting bill of the session, state Sen. Yvanna Cancela's measure to bring transparency (no longer price controls) to diabetes drugs, thus putting the nose under the tent for the country to see, has a hearing this afternoon in the Assembly. Nothing short of an intense political campaign is being waged, with the Culinary union going all out and Big PhRMA doing web ads and phone banks and lit drops.

I still find it hard to believe anyone votes against this who is not in a safe district – look how the GOP Scaredy Cat Caucus folded in the Senate after much Sturm und Drang. If Speaker Jason Frierson can keep the troops in line, this is going to the governor, and I think he will sign it.

A COUPLE OF MORNING FLASH NUGGETS

Nugget No. 1 – ICYMI, this Deadspin piece on the Raiders/Vegas is devastating.

Nugget No. 2 – Progressives are really making a last-minute push for the minimum wage increase. McDonald's workers protest today. It may be one of the final things decided. I still think it's hard to get the governor to sign something, but if he does, it will be because something worse, in the business community's eyes, could get on the ballot and will, as it did before, pass.

FAST FLASHES

Click and enjoy:

Maybe the Indy will get an interview!

Do the right thing.

TRIVIA QUESTION OF THE DAY

Today is the 62nd anniversary of the opening of a pioneering off-Strip, off-downtown casino that was the first of its kind. What was it, and what was the pioneering act?

Tuesday's winner: Golden's Howard Stutz

The question: Today is the birthdate of a former lawmaker who did the following: drafted a resolution (though not introduced in the Legislature) assigning Las Vegas and Carson City as "embassies" for potential incoming aliens (the outer space kind). When the Assembly dedicated the Extraterrestrial Highway, he wore a Darth Vader mask. Who?

The answer: Bob Price

(As always, hat tip to William Lefkovics, my favorite historian.)

Thank you Mrs. Kalkman for your response to my email. The neighborhood would appreciate and would be in full support of fencing/gating the park. Perhaps, Huntridge residents could be issued a FOB or key to access it. To be honest, we don't walk our dogs there currently because it is hazardous to their well being. The park is ridden with drug paraphernalia and human feces.
Until the park is rid of indigents, it is not safe for humans or our pets.
Thank you for your time and attention to this matter,

Good Morning, Mr. Jarmolowich:

Thank you for taking the time to contact Mayor Carolyn G. Goodman. It is always helpful and meaningful to hear from area residents with questions, suggestions and concerns.

Due to many inquiries similar to yours, Mayor Goodman has been in discussion with City staff (and City attorneys) about options. She is fully aware there is a problem there. One recommendation that has gained traction is to close the park all but for two hours in the morning and two in the evening for area residents to walk their dogs, etc. A City marshal presence would be maintained during the entirety of those four hours. As a concerned resident, do you think this might work? We are interested in your opinion. Along with this idea is a proposal to convert the park to a sculpture garden, which would involve the fencing/gating of the park with the gate open during the aforementioned four hours. Again, we value your reaction to that suggestion.

Again, on behalf of Mayor Goodman, thank you for writing. Your interest and activism are truly appreciated.

P.S. We love Greens and Proteins!

Subject: Huntridge Circle Park

Good afternoon,
I am writing to request to close the Huntridge Circle Park until a positive solution is created. It is hazardous and dangerous. My wife and I purchased a home on Francis Avenue not far from the tragic incident that occurred. The neighborhood has embraced this tragedy and has banded together to support each other.
The governmental organizations have not given us the same support.
That park is a hub for drugs and crime. It is not safe for women and children. When my wife walks her dog, she is constantly harassed. That is not ok.
We invested in downtown to make a change. We opened a small business downtown to elevate food offerings.
This park is a hazard and should be closed until a comprehensive solution is met.
Thank you,

Showing tribute of any kind to a drug addict is the most ridiculous thing your administration has come up with yet. The man was a good artist which he was paid highly for.
This is not someone I want my grandchildren to look up to. He killed himself! With Drugs!! This is how you wish to inspire the youth of our town. Your tribute is encouraging young people to follow in the footsteps of a drug addict!!
How sad you have decided to drag our town down a road of star idol worship instead of doing for and celebrating our military heroes. Shame on you. I am embarrassed for us all. Karleen Craig

Justices Drop Microsoft Warrant Row, But Fight Far From Over

Recently enacted federal legislation permitting prosecutors to reach user data stored abroad may have dealt the knockout blow to a U.S. Supreme Court dispute involving Microsoft, but the ability for service providers to continue to challenge international data grabs under the new regime means more fights aren't far off, attorneys say. Dear Commissioner,

We've met at a previous panel for VIPI and as a member of Veterans in Politics I sometimes come across various situations that may be beyond my comfort zone. Yesterday was one such example; I have a friend who lives in your area at [redacted]. Her name is Nancy Spilotro. Nancy is an elderly lady of 76 years of age, she has a son named Vincent who now resides with her although he is seldom there. Now, Nancy has a fairly famous name in this town, chiefly behind the activities her late husband is rumored to have been part of. That being said, no one deserves to be living in the conditions that she now survives through.

On Sunday, I went to check on her and it was bad, extremely bad. I've been wanting to get Nancy into a program for quite sometime now, but she believed her son would make everything okay. That didn't happen. To describe the situation is difficult, I am not ashamed to say that is is so bad that I actually shed a tear when I got home...There is dog, cat feces and urine everywhere in the house. No flush handle on the toilet, not a clean dish in site, no faucet handle on the kitchen sink no gas a stove with one dial and one working burner if the gas was on. etc.. etc.. etc.. As the lady from the fire dept said today she can smell it from the front door she doesn't need to see.

Nancy asked to be taken to hospital today so I called ambulance she was having chest pain...She is now at Sunrise and I'm looking to get her into some type of assisted living program. It would be horrific in my eyes to allow this lady to go back into this environment. The other parts of the abuse she's suffering deals with her SS benefits and prescription drugs that her son seems to be taking from her. She mentioned that him and his wife have both put hands on her in the past. I find this absolutely unacceptable and I hope you do to...

As a bit of a side note, I had gone to check on her because I mentioned her to the Mayor on Sat. and she told me to have her call her. I had no idea things had gotten this bad or I would have mentioned this to Mayor Goodman. I write you on directions from Steve Sanson based on her being a resident in your area. Can you help???

Subject: [Newsletter] [Marketing Mail] Missives from the Front: The Spring Offensive Begins!

Friend --

It's been a little while since you've heard from me - the Legislative committees had a quiet period while legislation moved (or failed to) across the floors of both houses. This week, however, bills began to enter their opposite houses again - and I was able to continue our advocacy for or against a large number of bills. I was also interviewed on Talking Truth to Power with Jennifer Terhune and Brendan Trainor on Friday, April 28th - we had a great discussion about the Libertarian Party of Nevada's work this Legislative Session, Donald Trump, North Korea, and a slew of other subjects. They're interested in having me back on after the Session ends to get a final report from the LP, and I'll be thrilled to join them.

As we move forward through the last month of the Session, I'd like to take a moment to explain the legislative process in broad strokes. First, either a legislator or a lobbyist writes and introduces a Bill Draft Request, or BDR, which may or may not become a bill. If it does become a bill, its first stop is a hearing in the relevant committee in its originating house, either Assembly or Senate. You can tell which house a bill originated in by the first letter - AB* are Assembly bills, and SB* are Senate bills. This initial hearing is where testimony regarding the bill - support or opposition - is heard; public testimony doesn't generally occur during work sessions, and never occurs during floor votes. The members of that committee then have a work session on the bill where they consider amendments and vote whether to pass it on to the floor of the originating house. If it passes out of the work session, the bill gets a vote on the floor of the Senate or Assembly. If it passes off the floor, the process begins again in the opposite house, where the bill gets its second initial committee hearing (open for public testimony). When I mention bills you've heard me talk about before, it's because they've survived the first half of this entire process and have finally reached the relevant committee on the opposite side of the Legislature, where I'm once again able to testify for or against them.

If any of these bills sound particularly interesting, you can share your opinion on them with the legislators and committees reviewing them by going here and typing in the relevant bill number. It'll send your message directly to the sponsors and co-sponsors. As some bills have more than ten sponsors, this is a great time-saver.

I began this week testifying in support of SB201, which would ban the use of conversion therapy on minors in Nevada, and SB110, which would provide an exemption for the newspaper publication requirement for trans people who change their names to conform to their gender identities. I've mentioned both of these bills to you in previous newsletters - they've made it through the Senate and had their first hearing in the Assembly, where I returned to support them again. Senator David Parks is the primary sponsor for both of these excellent bills, and he was very grateful for our support - grateful enough that he's requested our assistance on another bill he's sponsoring this Session.

As you may have heard, one of the more exciting upcoming bills is SB261, which would legalize the prescription of life-ending drugs for terminally ill patients in Nevada. On Tuesday, I received a phone call from Senator David Parks's office. They specifically requested the Libertarian Party's support on SB261, as they were impressed by our previous activism on the Senator's other bills (SB110 and SB201, mentioned above). First thing on Wednesday morning, I visited Senator Parks's office to get a better understanding of the bill. It's carefully designed to allow terminally ill patients to be prescribed a single dose of a life-ending drug which they can self-administer. My only minor concern with this bill is that it may impose some additional requirements and restrictions on life and health insurers, but those provisions may still be amended. I was honored to be approached and will be happy to support this bill when it receives its first hearing on May 10 (it was exempted from the original deadline).

I also chased down Assemblywoman Heidi Swank and chatted with her about AB321, which would have required boards of county commissioners to require Airbnb hosts to provide certain reports and information to a county or city. While we still don't like this bill (and urge you to use the form listed above to oppose it), Assemblywoman Swank did listen to our feedback and improve it before its Senate hearing, changing "requiring" to "authorizing." She gets points for that, at least.

The most exciting lobbying I did this week was joining forces with Americans For Prosperity (and potentially the ACLU) to lobby against Senate Joint Resolution 4, which would urge the federal government to adopt a Constitutional amendment regulating "political contributions and expenditures by corporations, unions and individuals." I agree with the ACLU that restricting an individual's capacity for political speech is a serious First Amendment issue. When Elliot Malin of Americans for Prosperity approached me and Holly Welborn of the ACLU to ask for our help lobbying the Assemblypeople who still have a chance to stop SJR4, I was eager to assist. Dashing through the hallways with Elliot from office to office scheduling meetings with every Assemblyperson on the Committee for Legislative Operations and Elections, I realized that, at least on a local level, government doesn't move blindly or monolithically - it's just people. Individuals and small groups can still have an outsized influence if they put in the hard work and facetime with their legislators to explain what matters to them and why. It was also exciting to realize that our work over the past several months has given the Libertarian Party of Nevada a certain amount of political capital. Visibility has led to legitimacy. The legislators take our opinions more seriously now than they have in years; they're willing (and in some cases, eager) to listen to and work with us.

I testified on many other bills last week, as well. SB125, sponsored by Senator Aaron Ford, is similar to AB181 - both restore certain civil rights for felons. While it's less broad than AB181 (it doesn't include Class A felons), which I also supported, SB125 is still an excellent piece of legislation that would allow non-violent offenders who have paid their debt to society to vote and serve on juries. I was proud to support this bill. According to the Sentencing Project, 4% of Nevadans have been convicted of a felony. The War on Drugs has resulted in mass incarceration for minor, non-violent drug offenses, creating a permanently disengaged underclass with no ability or incentive to participate in their democracy. Restoring felons' civil rights would decrease recidivism and give them a reason to care about their communities.

I also supported AB118 as it got its first Senate hearing. Under current Nevada law, those under 21 can't have CCW permits, but this bill creates a special exception for honorably-discharged or active members of the Armed Forces or National Guard between the ages of 18 and 21. We believe that these individuals have demonstrated their responsibility with firearms - and this is a basic Second Amendment right, in any case. This bill came in front of the Senate Committee this week, and I supported it.

SB399 would give Tribal ID cards equivalency with Nevada drivers' licenses for the purpose of personal identification. This is a simple, common-sense piece of legislation from Senator Settelmeyer - if a state or federal government issues an official ID and it has equivalent information, why shouldn't it be treated equivalently for identification purposes? I was happy to support this bill in the Assembly committee this week, as I believe it would remove a systemic state-imposed disadvantage from Nevada's tribal people.

In the same Assembly hearing, I also supported SB375, which would authorize the Governor or his or her designee to enter into agreements with Indian tribes in Nevada relating to the regulation of the use of marijuana. The trick with this one is that Indian reservations are technically both federal land and sovereign territories, both subject to federal drug laws. However, the residents want medical marijuana dispensaries like those available in the rest of Nevada. SB375 will allow them to enter into agreements with the Governor legalizing medical marijuana on Tribal lands. I hadn't expected to support this bill when I arrived in the hearing - I didn't know it existed - but it was an easy decision.

On Friday, I got through three bills within twenty minutes, which is probably an all-time lobbyist record. I got a flat tire and had to rush to make the hearings on time, but I made it! I dashed madly up the stairs to the fourth floor, where SB199 was being heard. This bill would create a new class of craft distilleries in Nevada ("estate" distilleries, specializing in high-end liquor created from local ingredients), got its first Assembly hearing, where I supported it. This bill from Senator Settelmeyer would spur both economic development and good spirits (yes, I said that in the hearing, and the legislators laughed) in Nevada.

Immediately afterwards, I sprinted down to the second floor, where the Senate Judiciary Committee was hearing AB229 and AB365. AB229 would render the provisions for marriage in NRS gender-neutral, and AB365 would create a pathway for non-religious marriage officiants and allow the state to sell legally-meaningless but good-for-tourism vow renewal certificates. I supported both in their first hearings in the Assembly. Senator Segerblom, who chairs Senate Judiciary, was in high spirits and a speedy mood, refusing to let anyone get in more than a minute's worth of testimony (their schedule was packed). I testified very quickly in support on both bills, to the Senator's gratitude, and that was it - a whirlwind of activism!

This week I've got meetings with eight Assemblypeople on SJR4 and testimony on another double handful of interesting bills, including AJR10 (Yucca Mountain), SB415 (feminine hygiene product tax exemption), SB398 (blockchain regulation ban), SB344 (edibles packaging), and many others. Should be fun!

I've got one final request for you: If you haven't followed @LPNevada on Twitter, go do it now! We're pushing for 5k (followers) in May, and it's one of the best ways to keep up-to-date with our upcoming events. Also, if you're not already a dues paying member of the Libertarian Party of Nevada, consider becoming one. Dues start at only $5/month and they help make these Missives possible.

That's it for this week!

President John F. Kennedy once said that a rising tide lifts all boats. Well, a North Las Vegas is rising from the dust of the Great Recession, and the progress stands to transform the entire Southern Nevada region.

Consider just two of the City's recent successes: Faraday Future, an electr maker that broke ground in April on a $1 billion, high-tech manufacturing faci Apex Industrial Park, anticipates creating 4,500 direct jobs and 9,000 suppl service jobs, pumping $87.5 billion into the local economy over the nex decades and netting $760 million in new tax revenues. Hyperloop One, wh manufacturing a revolutionary high-speed transportation platform at Apex, pla invest more than $121 million in Southern Nevada by testing its projects bringing 100 jobs to the region. Both projects are exciting indicators that Nort Vegas is emerging as a global technology leader and developing into a true innovation, with Apex at the heart of the development.

Now those are just two companies; Apex Industrial Park spans 18,000 acres. buildout of Apex is anticipated to pump a quarter of a trillion dollars into the economy over the next 20 years, and numerous businesses already have inc about buying and leasing land there. In fact, since the Faraday deal was fina large companies from California, the Midwest and Europe have shown inter developing facilities at Apex. Those companies' executives have marvel North Las Vegas' lean industrial zoning policies and the City's ability to streamline construction.

Of course, this all is phenomenal news for North Las Vegas (news that is more historic given these deals were executed during the City's most econom challenging time). But the happenings at Apex and in North Las Vegas in ge are equally transformative for the rest of the valley.

The key to any durable economy is diversity. And that is what North Las Veg delivering. The City is expanding the region's proven gaming and constr successes by recruiting cutting-edge transportation and technology comp here, organizations that will significantly broaden Southern Nevada's eco base.

That means more jobs for Southern Nevada residents, more homebuyers lo to put down roots, more developers wanting to invest and more retail and s shoppers to spend money. Once the Faraday plant has matured, state of estimate it will generate an additional $230 million in state general fund re and $270 million in local government revenue.

Perhaps more importantly, Faraday's investment in North Las Vegas mea expanded tax base and growing coffers for our school system - to the tune of million in K-12 education revenue over 20 years - a key ingredient for suc given our schools will be tasked with producing the next generation of worker thinkers.

With all that's going on at Apex, it's no wonder the world is watching - and i recent test demonstration by Hyperloop, for example, attracted scor international journalists and press coverage around the globe. Such a sp only helps the City of North Las Vegas, and all of Southern Nevada, multi successes.

Last term the Supreme Court decided six-arguably seven-"big" cases. Fi those big cases impacted local governments in some way. In some of these being down a Justice made all the difference-in at least two cases it ma difference at all. Beyond the big cases, the Court decided a number of "brea butter" issues-qualified immunity, public employment, and Fourth Amen searches- affecting local governments.

The big cases

In Friedrichs v. California Teachers Association, the Supreme Court issued opinion affirming the lower court's decision to not overrule Abood v. Detroit of Education (1977).

In Abood, the Supreme Court held that the First Amendment does not pr "agency shop" arrangements--where public employees who do not join the are still required to pay their "fair share" of union dues for collective-barga contract administration, and grievance-adjustment.

In two recent cases in 5-4 opinions written by Justice Alito and joined by the conservative Justices (including Justice Scalia and Justice Kennedy), the was very critical of Abood. The Court heard oral argument in Friedrichs in Ja before Justice Scalia died, and the five more conservative Justices seemed p to overrule Abood. Justice Scalia, who ultimately didn't participate in this likely would have voted to overrule Abood.

In Reynold v. Sims (1964), the Supreme Court established the principle o person, one-vote" requiring state legislative districts to be apportioned equall

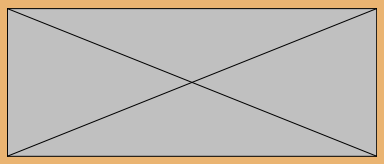
NLC&M Welcomes a New League Partner



The National League of Cities (NLC) Service Line Warranty Program, administered by Utility Service Partners, Inc., offers residents repair protection for in home plumbing, external sewer and external water lines. The Nevada League of Cities and Municipalities supports the NLC Service Line Warranty Program for Nevada communities for these main reasons:

1. The program educates homeowners as to their service line responsibilities.

2. The added value of the service itself - studies show most homeowners have not set aside funds for unexpected repairs.

3. The program is offered at no cost to the cities, who often receive a share of the revenues collected.

4. It is the only warranty program to market to residents only with the city's permission.

5. It is the only warranty program endorsed by the National League of Cities.

The NLC Service Line Warranty Program partners with more than 300 cities in North America and has helped more than 100,000 homeowners save over $64 million in service line repair costs.

The maximum total-population deviation between Texas Senate districts about 8 percent; the maximum voter-eligible population deviation between di exceeded 40 percent.

The Court's unanimous opinion concluded Texas may redistrict using population "based on constitutional history, this Court's decisions, longstanding practice."

Over the last 25 years the Supreme Court refused to decide this issue at three times (all the previous cases involved local governments).

The Supreme Court split 4-4 in United States v. Texas on whether the Presi deferred action immigration program violates federal law.
As a result, the Fifth Circuit's nationwide temporary stay of the program rema effect.

The Deferred Action for Parents of Americans (DAPA) program allows c undocumented immigrants who have lived in the United States for five years either came here as children or already have children who are U.S. citize permanent residents, to lawfully stay and work temporarily in the United State

The National League of Cities and the U.S. Conference of Mayors joine amicus brief in this case supporting the United States.

In Fisher v. University of Texas at Austin, the Court ruled 4-3 that the Univers Texas at Austin's race-conscious admissions program is constitutional.

Per Texas's Top Ten Percent Plan, the top ten percent of Texas high s graduates are automatically admitted to UT Austin, filling up to 75 percent class. Other students are admitted based on a combination of their grades scores, and "personal achievement index." Race is considered as one fac one of the two components of an applicant's "personal achievement index."
The Court rejected Abigail Fisher's argument that the university's use of ra unnecessary. This is the first time an education institution has won an affirm action case since Grutter v. Bollinger (2003).

In McDonnell v. United States, the Court unanimously reversed former Vi Governor Robert McDonnell's federal bribery conviction.

While in office McDonnell accepted more than $175,000 in loans, gifts, and benefits from Jonnie Williams. Williams wanted a Virginia state university to dietary supplement, Anatabloc, his company had developed.

The federal government claimed McDonnell committed at least five "official of bribery, including arranging for Williams to meet with Virginia goverr officials and hosting and attending events at the Governor's mansion desigr encourage Virginia university researchers to study Anatabloc.

The Court held that setting up meetings, calling other public officials, and h events do not alone qualify as "official acts."

The lower court will decide whether charges against McDonnell shou dismissed based on its new definition of "official acts" or whether McD should receive a new trial.

Bread and butter cases

Local government officials can be sued for money damages in their indi capacity if they violate a person's constitutional rights. Qualified immunity pr government officials from such lawsuits where the law they violated isn't "c established."

abandon their pursuit. While officers set up spike strips under an overpass, C Mullenix decided to shoot at Leija's car to disable it.

Officer Mullenix killed Leija but not disabling his vehicle. Leija's estate sued C Mullenix claiming that he violated the Fourth Amendment by using exce force.

The Court concluded Officer Mullenix should be granted qualified imm stating: "Given Leija's conduct, we cannot say that only someone 'p incompetent' or who 'knowingly violate[s] the law' would have perceiv sufficient threat and acted as Mullenix did."

In Heffernan v. City of Paterson, New Jersey,* the Court held 6-2 that a employer violates the First Amendment when it acts on a mistaken belief th employee engaged in First Amendment protected political activity.

Police officer Jeffery Heffernan worked in the office of the police chief. The r was running for reelection against a friend of Heffernan's, Lawrence Spag Heffernan was demoted after another member of the police force saw Heff picking up a Spagnola yard sign and talking to the Spagnola campaign ma and staff. Heffernan was picking up the sign for his bedridden mother.

The Court agreed that Heffernan has a First Amendment claim even thou engaged in no political activity protected by the First Amendment, becaus City's motive was to retaliate against him for political activity.

A police officer stopped Edward Streiff after he left a suspected drug house officer discovered Streiff had an outstanding warrant, searched him (legally) discovered he was carrying illegal drugs.

The Court held 5-3 in Utah v. Strieff that even though the initial stop was il the drug evidence could be admissible against Streiff in a trial.

The Court first concluded that the discovery of a valid, pre-existing, unta arrest warrant triggered the attenuation doctrine, which is an exception t exclusionary rule. The Court then concluded that the discovery of the warrant [a] sufficient intervening [attenuating] event to break the causal chain" betwee unlawful stop and the discovery of drugs.

In Birchfield v. North Dakota,* the Court held 5-3 that states may criminali arrestee's refusal to take a warrantless breath test. If states criminalize the re to take a blood test, police must obtain a warrant.

Per the search-incident-to-arrest exception to the Fourth Amendment, officers are allowed to search an arrestee's person, without first obtain warrant, to protect officer safety or evidence. To determine if this exce applies, the Court weighed the degree to which the search "intrudes upo individual's privacy" with the need to promote "legitimate government interest

The Court concluded the privacy intrusion of breath tests was minimal bu privacy intrusion of blood tests was not.

What's next?

The Supreme Court has accepted three cases of interest to local governme be decided in its 2016-2017 term. The issue in Wells Fargo v. City of Miam Bank of America v. City of Miami is whether cities have standing to sue l under the Fair Housing Act over loses cities have experienced cause discriminatory lending practices. In Manuel v. City of Joliet the Court will d whether it is possible to bring malicious prosecution claims under the F Amendment possible. The question in Murr v. Wisconsin is whether m provisions in state law and local ordinances, where nonconforming, adjacer under common ownership are combined for zoning purposes, may result i unconstitutional taking of property.

Senators Introduce Bill that Encourages States to Reduce Crime and Prison Populations

A Federal Plan to Reduce Mass Incarceration

Sens. Cory Booker (D-N.J.) and Richard Blumenthal (D-Ct.) introduced a bill, widely-backed by civil rights groups, that would use the power of the purse to reduce incarceration and crime at the same time. The bill creates a federal grant program that emboldens states to continue reform efforts, and counters the archaic "tough-on-crime" policies coming from Attorney General Jeff Sessions.

Overall Crime Stable, Chicago an Extreme Outlier

Year-End Crime Data Shows Overall Crime Rate Stable in 2016

Chicago accounted for more than 55 percent of the urban murder increase last year, according to a Brennan Center analysis of final 2016 crime data from the nation's 30 largest cities. The overall national crime rate remained stable. On average, numbers show that Americans remain safer today than they have been at almost any time in the past quarter-century.

Brennan Center Experts Push Back on the Attorney General's Policies

Jeff Sessions Isn't Making America Safer. He Might Be Making it More Dangerous.

Inimai Chettiar and Ames Grawert

The Attorney General's approach to sentencing, which he outlined last month in a Washington Post op-ed, goes far beyond reason and risks reigniting the same, misguided “war on drugs” that brought the nation’s criminal justice system to this crisis point, without doing anything to enhance public safety. The Brennan Center team recently responded, also in the Washington Post.

Republicans Continue to Push for Reform in Congress

Bipartisan Efforts on Criminal Justice Reform Continue

Noah Atchison

A bill that would give federal judges more discretion in sentencing was immediately resurrected by lawmakers, including

Sen. Rand Paul (R-Ky.) after Attorney General Jeff Sessions returned the Justice Department to archaic, "tough-on-crime" policies of the past.

In The News

New Bill Aims to Curb Prison Populations But Can It Get Past Jeff Sessions?

Historically, large federal grants have been doled out in a way that incentivizes states to increase their prison populations, Inimai Chettiar told Rolling Stone. But this new bill from Sens. Booker and Blumenthal would do the opposite. And some of Attorney General Sessions' former colleagues in the Senate think they could get him to support some sort of reform.

Senate Dems Propose Incentives to Reduce State Prison Populations

“The federal government has a long history of dangling money in front of state and local leaders to spur policy changes,” program Director Inimai Chettiar said in a statement.

“We saw it with the 1994 Crime Bill, which helped put more people behind bars. This bold bill shifts the current flow of funding in the opposite direction. It is one of the single biggest steps we can take to reduce imprisonment.”

Jail Isn t the Place to Treat Drug Addiction

In a letter to the editor, Inimai Chettiar and Grainne Dunne discuss the risks of turning to in-jail treatment as a solution to opioid use. Doing so "reinforces the belief that people battling addiction deserve punishment — undoing years of progress to understand addiction as a health issue," they write.

Soft Cell: California Inmates Can Pay for Cushier Accommodations

Lauren-Brooke Eisen talked to NBC News about how pay-to-stay jails can exacerbate inequality in the criminal justice system. "Those who are wealthy are able to upgrade their facilities to stay at nicer jails than those who are poor who may have committed the same exact crime," she said.

Women Unshackled: Policy Solutions to Address the Growth of Female Incarceration

present an event, powered by Google, focused on the unique challenges women face in the criminal justice system. The conversation will feature prominent government officials from both sides of the aisle, including Oklahoma Gov. Mary Fallin (R), Sens. Cory Booker (D-N.J) and Kamala Harris (D-Calif.), and Rep. Mia Love (R-Utah). There will also be notable policy experts, impacted individuals, law enforcement and judges.

Labor Dept. Quiets Fiduciary Critics, If Only For A Day

The Wall Street sabers that rattled as the U.S. Department of Labor prepared its controversial fiduciary duty rule nearly fell silent on Wednesday, a sign that the broad concessions the Obama administration made to the final rule took a lot of the fight out of its critics.

Grassley, Judge Garland To Meet Over Breakfast

Sen. Chuck Grassley, R-Iowa, will meet with D.C. Circuit Judge Merrick B. Garland for breakfast in the coming week, but gave no indication he planned to back down from his staunch opposition to considering the U.S. Supreme Court nominee.

Sweeping Medical Innovation Bill Nears Senate Vote

The U.S. Senate Committee on Health, Education, Labor and Pensions on Wednesday advanced five bills aimed at strengthening medical research, setting the stage for a vote in the full Senate on a broader package of legislation that would also streamline and incentivize development of drugs and devices.

McCain Wants EPA Head Subpoenaed Over Gold King Hearing

Sen. John McCain on Wednesday asked the Senate Indian Affairs Committee to issue a subpoena for the head of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency to appear at a hearing in Phoenix about the Gold King mine spill, saying the EPA declined to send someone.

Pfizer, Allergan End $160B Merger After New Inversion Regs

Pfizer and Allergan called off their planned $160 billion combination Wednesday, marking an end to what would have been the largest so-called inversion transaction on record after the U.S. Department of Treasury issued new rules seeking to curb the tax-motivated deal structure.

Labor Dept. Eases Parts Of Final Fiduciary Rule

The Obama administration on Wednesday unveiled its final rules to impose a fiduciary duty on broker-dealers who advise retirement savers, and has said it has eased the hotly-contested measures in a way that should make the new regulations more palatable to the industry that has fought hard to stop them.

A new final rule requiring shippers, carriers and brokers to follow stringent hygiene and record-keeping procedures to safely transport food in the U.S. will affect more players in the food supply chain, ensuring businesses will face a new set of operational challenges, experts say.

Why Plaintiffs Firms Will Love DOL's New Fiduciary Rules

The U.S. Department of Labor's fiduciary rules give more power to retirement savers, experts said, providing investors and their attorneys an important new tool to bring claims when they suspect their broker-dealer doesn't have their best interests at heart.

Nixed Pfizer Inversion Casts Uncertainty On Similar Deals

Pfizer's scrapped plans for its record $160 billion corporate inversion with Irish drugmaker Allergan may be just one casualty of the U.S. Treasury's latest rulemaking, but the thwarted deal is fostering concerns that other pending inversions will also be scuttled by the government's hard stance on the deal structure. Here, Law360 recaps four pending deals that could get swept up in the latest crackdown.

FDA Calls Retroactive Exclusivity Unfair To Generics Makers

The U.S. Food and Drug Administration on Tuesday defended its refusal to retroactively apply a new policy on exclusivity for brand-name drugs with multiple active ingredients, arguing in D.C. federal court that it would be unfair to generic-drug makers.

Ebola Funds Go To Zika As Congress Stalls On $1.8B Request

The Obama administration on Wednesday said it would be reallocating $589 million to fighting the Zika virus, largely from its Ebola fund, as Congress has yet to act on its request for an additional $1.8 billion exclusively for the newer threat.

Fla. High Court Urged Not To Hear Abortion-Delay Law Suit

Florida's attorney general has told the state's high court that it should not take up a challenge to a state law requiring women to wait 24 hours after an initial doctor visit before undergoing an abortion, arguing the court lacks jurisdiction.

Calif.'s New Minimum Wage: What Employers Need To Know

California's newly enacted statewide minimum wage law is not good news for California employers. However, it's also not cause for immediate shock, as it will be implemented in phases, overlap with other local minimum wage laws, and includes limited procedural protections meant to reign in unwarranted or fiscally devastating minimum wage increases, says Bryan Hawkins at Stoel Rives LLP.

Florida Emerges From Proceedings Supplementary Quagmire

Proceedings supplementary have been part of Florida’s judgment collection practice since the early 1900s, yet a lack of clarity in the state's statute has manifested in a legal quagmire. Gov. Rick Scott recently signed a bill into law that enables an effective and prompt process to collect judgments, say Michel Weisz of Berger Singerman LLP and Barbara Riesberg of RiesbergLaw.

FTC Study Could Lead To Changes In PCI DSS Certification

While the Federal Trade Commission did not specify a motivation for its study of Payment Card Industry Data Security Standard assessments or how the results might be used, the level of detail of the FTC’s questions and the depth of required responses suggest that the FTC’s interest in the PCI DSS is more than a passing one, say attorneys with Ropes & Gray LLP.

Checks And Balances In The Inter Partes Review Statute

Multiple inter partes review attacks on a patent should be expected. However, there is no standing requirement for filing an IPR petition, and the recent increase in IPRs from member-funded trade associations and defensive patent aggregators may be upsetting the desired balance between protecting patent owners from endless challenges to their patents and ensuring that only novel and nonobvious innovations receive patent protection, say attorneys with Shearman & Sterling LLP.

Broadband Deployment Group Set To Launch, FCC Says

A new advisory committee on broadband deployment at the Federal Communications Commission will meet for the first time late this month, Chairman Ajit Pai said Thursday, naming 29 members to the group that he has said will help the FCC identify barriers to investment.

Senate Dems Push ISPs To Follow Nixed Privacy Rules

In the wake of a repeal of the Federal Communication Commission's broadband privacy rules, made official this week by President Donald Trump, Senate Democrats asked the nation's largest internet providers on Wednesday to disclose how they intend to protect consumers' privacy.

Rep. Floats Bill To Boost Broadcast Ownership Diversity

Rep. G.K. Butterfield, D-N.C., has introduced a bill at the Federal Communications Commission, seeking to aid new minority- and women-owned broadcast stations with several changes to increase the diversity of broadcast station ownership.

Telcos Urge FCC To Address Pole Owners' Buildout Barriers

Telecom companies that want to expand wireless service are increasingly crippled by preexisting infrastructure owners charging too-high rental rates, representatives from the American Cable Association and others have told the Federal Communications Commission.

Revised Charter-TW Merger Condition Helps Maine, Sen. Says

Sen. Angus King, I-Maine, praised the Federal Communications Commission on Wednesday for dropping a forced competition condition in its approval of the merger of Charter Communications and Time Warner Cable, saying the move will help more areas gain access to broadband service.

ABA Needs A New Model Legal Ethics Rule

Perhaps lost in the presidential post-election tumult was a report issued in late 2016 by an international body evaluating U.S. compliance with anti-money laundering and counter-terrorist financing standards. Considering repeated criticisms of the legal profession, the American Bar Association should seriously consider a new model legal ethics rule, says Kevin Shepherd of Venable LLP.

Why FCC Cannot Require Opt-Out Language In Solicited Faxes

The D.C. Circuit's ruling in Bais Yaakov v. FCC takes some wind out of the sails of would-be plaintiffs seeking to capitalize on the nuances of Telephone Consumer Protection Act and Federal Communications Commission rules. The ruling shows the court's willingness to hold the FCC accountable when it takes actions outside of its authority, say attorneys with Eversheds Sutherland (US) LLP.

ACA Repeal And Replace: Down, But Not Out

Although the American Health Care Act was withdrawn from a U.S. House of Representatives vote scheduled last month, major Affordable Care Act changes for employers and group health plans remain possible this year, says Eric Schillinger of Trucker Huss APC.

Compliance Front And Center As HHS Keeps Up HIPAA Heat

For many, the first quarter of 2017 was spent ensuring proper documentation of Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act compliance programs. As a result, the industry has seen, among other things, an increase in the use of third-party compliance companies to conduct HIPAA risk assessments and a shift to more comprehensive business associate agreements, say David Saunders and William Pericak of Jenner & Block.

Law360's Weekly Verdict: Legal Lions & Lambs

Simpson Thacher and Davis Polk are among this week's legal lions for their work advising the planned $46 billion takeover of Syngenta approved by EU regulators Wednesday, while Morris Nichols and Arnold & Porter Kaye Scholer landed on the legal lambs list over a decision Friday that jeopardizes nearly $500 million in annual prescription drug sales for their client.

Midwest Law Firm Rolls Out 16-Week Parental Leave Program

Midwest law firm Taft Stettinius & Hollister LLP has implemented major changes to its parental leave program, announcing that it will offer 16 weeks off for new parents regardless of primary or secondary caregiver status, joining a number of other firms that have boosted perks for fledgling moms and dads.

MoFo, Others Slam Defunct Firm Clawback At Calif. High Court

More than 30 major law firms led by Morrison & Foerster LLP have weighed in on the California Supreme Court battle over whether dissolved law firms can claw back unfinished work performed by former partners at new firms, saying there is "no reason" they should be entitled to such a windfall.

Law Firms' Value Is In Pricing The Intangible In Deals

While clients prefer major transactional law firms for their reputation and skill in crafting a price for deals, the real benefit comes from the firms' ability to analyze the market and provide the most value possible for intangible, nonprice terms, according to a paper published Thursday.

Dewey Judge Reins In State's Financial Expert

New York prosecutors hit a bit of turbulence in the retrial of two former Dewey & LeBoeuf LLP executives on Thursday when a judge shut down an attempt to use an expert to show the pair created "improper" financial statements.

Subject: Mayor Carolyn Goodman (Scarlet Ray Watt) Urgent 'FSE' Video Update.

Mayor Carolyn Goodman

Dear Lady Mayor,

Here is yet another typical work week example illustrating the level of safety concerns I have endured on a regular basis, particularly taking an increased spike in occurrences during the past year, as I continually attempt to perform as a professional comedy ventriloquist beneath the Fremont Street Experience canopy.

The following video footage was captured- during a seven day period beginning on the 8/17/2016 and culminating on 8/23/2016. May I please take a brief moment, during your busy schedule, to setup the following filmed piece that highlights a clear lack in quality of the security safety and policing procedures presently in place on Fremont Street Experience- security protocol that is supposedly designed to protect visiting tourists, locals and street performers from harm/harassment.

Unfortunately, for me I am harassed on three separate occasions during my performances by individuals; the first openly calling me the 'N' word he having early spat on a passing tourist and shouted profanities at children, the second verbally abusing me (while allegedly she appears under the influence of medication/drugs) and the third and extremely way beyond annoying gentleman firstly starts of with a racist tirade directed towards me in the form of asking me if I had an authorized USA' immigration 'Green Card' before threatening to 'knock' me out!

I being a professional entertainer, with many decades of international experience managed, as expected, to display an immense amount of restraint and composure while enduring an horrendous amount of verbal racist abuse at the hands of the above featured individuals.

One must never lose sight of the fact that if I or anyone else had been irresponsible enough to have placed the merest of fingers on any of my abusers, rest assured we would be currently residing in Clark County' jail cell.

One can clearly hear during the video clip, a passing tourist say, "he was also saying things to the kids." relating to the the person that had early also spat on a member of the public.

Sadly the response from the Fremont Street Security' officers was to say, "that's the City Ordinance, man you have a right to do what you want being mentally ill has nothing to do with it."

I have written to Mr. Robert Gallego (Director of Security/Parking) at the Fremont Street Experience and supplied him at a great deal of time, effort and personal expense to my office- numerous previous video clips highlighting safety lapses on the Fremont Street Experience.

One can only fairly conclude that Mr. Gallego deems such racist harassing behavior somewhat acceptable.

Yours truly,

Scarlet Ray Watt

Toshiba Company history. What's interesting is the "storage solutions." Could that be storage as in large cargo containers such as the business at LinkedIn by Ozgur Aktas? He was a military contractor either at an American military base in Turkey or was it in Germany? I always thought it had to do with global drug trafficking of heroin and cocaine. Is it possible these large storage containers contained nuclear waste moving it via these large cargo containers? Large storage containers Toshiba or data storage - Toshiba - Samsung? Or both? It's my undestanding that the FBI can go back 10 years on a website to track information.

Toshiba Corporation (, Kabushiki-gaisha Tōshiba, English: /təˈʃiːbə, tɒ-, toʊ-/[2]) is a Japanese multinational conglomerate headquartered in Tokyo, Japan. Its diversified products and services include information technology and communications equipment and systems, electronic components and materials, power systems, industrial and social infrastructure systems, consumer electronics, household appliances, medical equipment, office equipment, as well as lighting and logistics.

Toshiba was founded in 1939 as Tokyo Shibaura Denki K.K. through the merger of Shibaura Seisaku-sho (founded in 1875) and Tokyo Denki (founded in 1890). The company name was officially changed to Toshiba Corporation in 1978.

It is listed on the Tokyo Stock Exchange, where it is a constituent of the Nikkei 225 and TOPIX indices, the Osaka Securities Exchange and the Nagoya Stock Exchange. Toshiba is the ninth largest semiconductor manufacturer in the world.[citation needed] In 2017, Toshiba filed unaudited quarterly results because of uncertainties at Westinghouse, which had filed for Chapter 11 bankruptcy protection. Toshiba stated that "substantial doubt about the company's ability to continue as a going concern exists".[3]

Toshiba is organized into four groupings: the Digital Products Group, the Electronic Devices Group, the Home Appliances Group and the Social Infrastructure Group. Midea Group, a Chinese company, bought a controlling 80.1% stake in the Toshiba Home Appliances Group in 2016.[4][5]

History

Tanaka SeisakushoTanaka Seisakusho (, Tanaka Engineering Works) was the first company established by Tanaka Hisashige, one of the most original and productive inventor-engineers during the Tokugawa / Edo period. Established in July 1875, it was the first Japanese company to manufacture telegraph equipment. It also manufactured switches, and miscellaneous electrical and communications equipment. The company was inherited by Tanaka's adopted son, and later became half of the present Toshiba company. Several people who worked at Tanaka Seisakusho or who received Tanaka's guidance at a Kubusho (Ministry of Industries) factory later became pioneers themselves. These included Miyoshi Shōichi who helped Fujioka make the first power generator in Japan and to establish a company, Hakunetsusha to make bulbs; Oki Kibatarō, the founder of the present Oki Denki (Oki Electric Industry); and Ishiguro Keizaburō, a co-founder of the present Anritsu.[6]

After the demise of the founder in 1881 Tanaka Seisakusho became partly owned by General Electric and expanded into the production of torpedoes and mines at the request of the Imperial Japanese Navy, to become on the largest manufacturing companies of the time. However, as the Navy started to use competitive bids and then build its own works, the demand decreased substantially and the company started to lose money. The main creditor to the company, Mitsui Bank, took over the insolvent company in 1893 and renamed it Shibaura Seisakusho (Shibaura Engineering Works).[6]

Shibaura Seisakusho

Shibaura Seisakusho (, Shibaura Engineering Works) was the new name given to the company Tanaka Seisakusho (Tanaka Engineering Works), after it was declared insolvent in 1893 and taken over by Mitsui Bank.

In 1910, it formed a tie-up with GE USA, which, in exchange for technology acquired about a quarter of the shares of Shibaura. With this investment GE now had a stake in both Tokyo Denki and Shibaura Seisakusho - two companies that had a complementary line of products in light as well as heavy electrical equipment. Both companies were merged in 1939 to create Tokyo Shibaura Denki (Tokyo Shibaura Electric Company, now Toshiba). The relation with GE continued until the beginning of the war and, after the war, resumed in 1953 with GE's 24 percent shareholding. This percentage has, however, decreased substantially since then.[6]

Hakunetsusha (Tokyo Denki)

Hakunetsusha ( ) was a company established by Shōichi Miyoshi and Fujioka Ichisuke, two of Japan's industrial pioneers during the Tokugawa / Edo period. It specialized in the manufacture of light bulbs.

The company was established in 1890, and started out by selling bulbs using bamboo filaments. However, following the opening up of trade with the West through the Unequal treaty, Hakunetsusha met with fierce competition from imports. Its bulb cost about 60 per cent more than the imports and the quality was poorer. The company managed to survive with the booms after the First Sino-Japanese War of 1894–95 and the Russo-Japanese War of 1904–05, but afterward its financial position was precarious.

In 1905 the company was renamed Tokyo Denki (Tokyo Electric) and entered into a financial and technological collaboration with General Electric of USA. General Electric acquired 51 percent share of ownership, sent a vice president, and provided the technology for bulb-making. Production equipment was bought from GE and Tokyo Denki soon started selling its products with GE's trademark.

In 1939, Tokyo Denki and Shibaura Seisakusho were merged to form Tokyo Shibaura Denki (Tokyo Shibaura Electric Company, now Toshiba).

Toshiba was founded in 1939 by the merger of Shibaura Seisakusho (Shibaura Engineering Works)[7] and Tokyo Denki (Tokyo Electric). Shibaura Seisakusho had been founded as Tanaka Seisakusho by Tanaka Hisashige in July 1875 as Japan's first manufacturer of telegraph equipment.[6] In 1904, it was renamed Shibaura Seisakusho. Through the first decades of the 20th century, Shibaura Seisakusho had become a major manufacturer of heavy electrical machinery as Japan modernized during the Meiji Era and became a world industrial power. Tokyo Denki was founded as Hakunetsusha in 1890 and had been Japan's first producer of incandescent electric lamps. It later diversified into the manufacture of other consumer products and in 1899 had been renamed Tokyo Denki. The merger of Shibaura and Tokyo Denki created a new company called Tokyo Shibaura Denki (Tokyo Shibaura Electric) (東　芝　　). It was soon nicknamed Toshiba, but it was not until 1978 that the company was officially renamed Toshiba Corporation.

The Toshiba pavilion at Expo '85.

The group expanded rapidly, driven by a combination of organic growth and by acquisitions, buying heavy engineering and primary industry firms in the 1940s and 1950s. Groups created include Toshiba Music Industries/Toshiba EMI (1960), Toshiba International Corporation (1970s) Toshiba Electrical Equipment (1974), Toshiba Chemical (1974), Toshiba Lighting and Technology (1989), Toshiba America Information Systems (1989) and Toshiba Carrier Corporation (1999).

Toshiba is responsible for a number of Japanese firsts, including radar (1912), the TAC digital computer (1954), transistor television and microwave oven (1959), color video phone (1971), Japanese word processor (1978), MRI system (1982), laptop personal computer (1986), NAND EEPROM (1991), DVD (1995), the Libretto sub-notebook personal computer (1996) and HD DVD (2005).

In 1977, Toshiba acquired the Brazilian company Semp (Sociedade Eletromercantil Paulista), subsequently forming Semp Toshiba through the combination of the two companies' South American operations.

In 1950, Tokyo Shibaura Denki was renamed Toshiba. This logo was used from 1950-1969. It was also used later on for hard drives .[8]

In 1987, Tocibai Machine, a subsidiary of Toshiba, was accused of illegally selling CNC milling machines used to produce very quiet submarine propellers to the Soviet Union in violation of the CoCom agreement, an international embargo on certain countries to COMECON countries. The Toshiba-Kongsberg scandal involved a subsidiary of Toshiba and the Norwegian company Kongsberg Vaapenfabrikk. The incident strained relations between the United States and Japan, and resulted in the arrest and prosecution of two senior executives, as well as the imposition of sanctions on the company by both countries.[10] Senator John Heinz of Pennsylvania said "What Toshiba and Kongsberg did was ransom the security of the United States for $517 million."

In 2001, Toshiba signed a contract with Orion Electric, one of the world's largest OEM consumer video electronic makers and suppliers, to manufacture and supply finished consumer TV and video products for Toshiba to meet the increasing demand for the North American market. The contract ended in 2008, ending seven years of OEM production with Orion.

In December 2004, Toshiba quietly announced it would discontinue manufacturing traditional in-house cathode-ray tube (CRT) televisions. In 2006, Toshiba terminated production of in-house plasma TVs. To ensure its future competitiveness in the flat-panel digital television and display market, Toshiba has made a considerable investment in a new kind of display technology called SED. Before World War II, Toshiba was a member of the Mitsui Group zaibatsu (family-controlled vertical monopoly). Today Toshiba is a member of the Mitsui keiretsu (a set of companies with interlocking business relationships and shareholdings), and still has preferential arrangements with Mitsui Bank and the other members of the keiretsu. Membership in a keiretsu has traditionally meant loyalty, both corporate and private, to other members of the keiretsu or allied keiretsu. This loyalty can extend as far as the beer the employees consume, which in Toshiba's case is Asahi.

In July 2005, BNFL confirmed it planned to sell Westinghouse Electric Company, then estimated to be worth $1.8 billion (£1 billion).[11] The bid attracted interest from several companies including Toshiba, General Electric and Mitsubishi Heavy Industries and when the Financial Times reported on 23 January 2006 that Toshiba had won the bid, it valued the company's offer at $5 billion (£2.8 billion). The sale of Westinghouse by the Government of the United Kingdom surprised many industry experts, who questioned the wisdom of selling one of the world's largest producers of nuclear reactors shortly before the market for nuclear power was expected to grow substantially; China, the United States and the United Kingdom are all expected to invest heavily in nuclear power.[12] The acquisition of Westinghouse for $5.4 billion was completed on 17 October 2006, with Toshiba obtaining a 77 percent share, and partners The Shaw Group a 20 percent share and Ishikawajima-Harima Heavy Industries Co. Ltd. a 3 percent share.

In late 2007, Toshiba took over from Discover Card as the sponsor of the top-most screen of One Times Square in New York City.[13] It displays the iconic 60-second New Year's countdown on its screen, as well as messages, greetings, and advertisements for the company. It was taken over by Capital One in late 2018.

In January 2009, Toshiba acquired the HDD business of Fujitsu.[14][15]

Toshiba announced on 16 May 2011, that it had agreed to acquire all of the shares of the Swiss-based advanced-power-meter maker Landis+Gyr for $2.3 billion.[16] In 2010 the company released a series of television models including the WL768, YL863, VL963 designed in collaboration with Danish designer Timothy Jacob Jensen.[17] In April 2012, Toshiba agreed to acquire IBM's point-of-sale business for $850 million, making it the world's largest vendor of point-of-sale systems.[18][19]

In July 2012, Toshiba was accused of fixing the prices of LCD panels in the United States at a high level. While such claims were denied by Toshiba,[20] they have agreed to settle alongside several other manufacturers for a total of $571 million.[21]

In December 2013, Toshiba completed its acquisition of Vijai Electricals Limited plant at Hyderabad and set up its own base for manufacturing of transmission and distribution products (transformers and switchgears) under the Social Infrastructure Group in India as Toshiba Transmission & Distribution Systems (India) Private Limited.

2014 OCZ Storage Solutions Acquisition

In January 2014, Toshiba completed its acquisition of OCZ Storage Solutions.[22] OCZ Technology stock was halted on 27 November 2013. OCZ then stated they expected to file a petition for bankruptcy and that Toshiba Corporation had expressed interest in purchasing its assets in a bankruptcy proceeding.[23][24] On 2 December 2013, OCZ announced Toshiba had agreed to purchase nearly all of OCZ's assets for $35 million.[25] The deal was completed on 21 January 2014 when the assets of OCZ Technology Group became a new independently-operated subsidiary of Toshiba named OCZ Storage Solutions.[26] OCZ Technology Group then changed its name to ZCO Liquidating Corporation;[27] on 18 August 2014, ZCO Liquidating Corporation and its subsidiaries were liquidated.[28] OCZ Storage Solutions was dissolved on 1 April 2016 and absorbed into Toshiba America Electronic Components, Inc.,[29][30] with OCZ becoming a brand of Toshiba.

In March 2014, Toshiba sued SK Hynix accusing the company for stealing technology of their NAND flash memory.[31]

In October 2014, Toshiba and United Technologies agreed a deal to expand their joint venture outside Japan.[32]

Toshiba announced in early 2015 that they would stop making televisions in its own factories. From 2015 onward, Toshiba televisions will be made by Compal for the U.S., or by Vestel and other manufacturers for the European market.

In January 2016, Toshiba's security division unveiled a new bundle of services for schools that use its surveillance equipment. The program, which is intended for both K-12 and higher education, includes education discounts, alerts and post-warranty support, among other features, on its IP-based security gear.[33]

As of March 2016, Toshiba is preparing to start construction on a cutting-edge new semiconductor plant in Japan that will mass-produce chips based on the ultra-dense flash variant. Toshiba expects to spend approximately 360 billion yen, or $3.2 billion, on the project through May 2019.[34]

In April 2016, Toshiba recalled 100,000 faulty laptop lithium-ion batteries, which are made by Panasonic, that can overheat, posing burn and fire hazards to consumers, according to the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission. Toshiba first announced the recall in January, and said it was recalling the batteries in certain Toshiba Notebook computers sold since June 2011.[35]

In September 2016, Toshiba announced the first wireless power receiver IC using the Qi 1.2.2 specification, developed in association with the Wireless Power Consortium.[36]

In late December 2016 Toshiba announced losses in the Westinghouse subsidiary from nuclear plant construction would lead to a write-down of several billion dollars.[37]

In January 2017, a person with direct knowledge of the matter reported that the company plans on making its chip division a separate business.[38]

2015 accounting scandal

Toshiba first announced in May 2015 that it was investigating an accounting scandal and it might have to revise its profits for the previous three years.[39][40] On 21 July 2015, CEO Hisao Tanaka announced his resignation amid an accounting scandal that he called "the most damaging event for our brand in the company's 140-year history". Profits had been inflated by $1.2 billion over the previous seven years.[41] Eight other senior officials also resigned, including the two previous CEOs.[42] Chairman Masashi Muromachi was appointed acting CEO.[43] Following the scandal, Toshiba Corp. was removed from a stock index showcasing Japan's best companies. That was the second reshuffle of the index, which picks companies with the best operating income, return on equity and market value.[44]

In September 2015, Toshiba shares fell to their lowest point in two and a half years. The firm said in a statement that its net losses for the quarterly period were 12.3 billion yen ($102m; £66m). The company noted poor performances in its televisions, home appliances and personal computer businesses.[45]

In December 2015, Muromachi said the episode had wiped about $8 billion off Toshiba's market value. He forecast a record 550 billion yen (about US $4.6 billion) annual loss and warned the company would have to overhaul its TV and computer businesses. Toshiba would not be raising funds for two years, he said. The next week, a company spokesperson announced Toshiba would in early 2016 seek 300 billion yen ($2.5 billion), taking the company's indebtedness to more than 1 trillion yen (about $8.3 billion).[46]

In May 2016, it was announced that Satoshi Tsunakawa, the former head of Toshiba's medical equipment division, was named CEO. This appointment came after the accounting scandal that occurred.[47][48]

2017 US nuclear construction liabilities

In February 2017, Toshiba revealed unaudited details of a 390 billion yen ($3.4 billion) corporate wide loss, mainly arising from its majority owned US based Westinghouse nuclear construction subsidiary which was written down by 712 billion yen ($6.3 billion). On 14 February 2017, Toshiba delayed filing financial results, and chairman Shigenori Shiga, formerly chairman of Westinghouse, resigned.[49][50][51]

Construction delays, regulatory changes and cost overruns at Westinghouse built nuclear facilities Vogtle units 3 and 4 in Waynesboro, Georgia and VC Summer units 2 and 3 in South Carolina, are cited as the main causes of the dramatic fall in Toshiba's financial performance and collapse in share price. Fixed priced construction contracts negotiated by Westinghouse with Georgia Power have left Toshiba with uncharted liabilities that will likely result in the sale of key Toshiba operating subsidiaries to secure the company's future.[52]

Westinghouse filed for Chapter 11 bankruptcy protection on 29 March 2017.[53][54] It was estimated this would cost 9 billion dollar annual net loss.[55]

On 11 April 2017, Toshiba filed unaudited quarterly results. Auditors PricewaterhouseCoopers had not signed of the accounts because of uncertainties at Westinghouse. Toshiba stated that "substantial doubt about the company's ability to continue as a going concern exists".[3][56] On 25 April 2017, Toshiba announced its decision to replace its auditor after less than a year. Earlier in April, the company filed twice-delayed business results without an endorsement from auditor PricewaterhouseCoopers (PwC).[55][57]

On 20 September 2017, Toshiba's board approved a deal to sell its memory chip business to a group led by Bain Capital for US$18 billion, with financial backing by companies such as Apple, Dell Technologies, Hoya Corporation, Kingston Technology, Seagate Technology, and SK Hynix.[58][59] The newly-independent company was named Toshiba Memory Corporation.

On 15 November 2017, Hisense reached a deal to acquire 95% of Toshiba Visual Solutions for US$113.6 million.[60]

Later that month, the company announced that it would pull out of its long-standing sponsorships of the Japanese television programs Sazae-san, Nichiyō Gekijo, and the video screens topping out One Times Square in New York City. The company cited that the value of these placements were reduced by its exit from consumer-oriented lines of business.[61]

On 6 April 2018 Toshiba announced the completion of the sale of Westinghouse's holding company to Brookfield Business Partners and some partners.[62]

Operations

3D television

In October 2010, Toshiba unveiled the Toshiba Regza GL1 21" LED backlit LCD TV glasses-free 3D prototype at CEATEC 2010. This system supports 3D capability without glasses (utilising an integral imaging system of 9 parallax images with vertical lenticular sheet). The retail product was released in December 2010.[84]

4K Ultra HD televisions

4K Ultra HD (3840×2160p) televisions provides four times the resolution of 1080p Full HD televisions. Toshiba's 4K HD LED televisions are powered by a CEVO 4K Quad + dual-core processor.[85]

HD DVD

Further information: HD DVD

On 19 February 2008, Toshiba announced that it would be discontinuing its HD DVD storage format following defeat in a format "war" against Blu-ray.[86] The HD DVD format had failed after most of the major US film studios backed the Blu-ray format, which was developed by Sony, Panasonic, Philips and Pioneer Corporation. Conceding the abandonment of HD DVD, Toshiba's President, Atsutoshi Nishida said "We concluded that a swift decision would be best [and] if we had continued, that would have created problems for consumers, and we simply had no chance to win".[87]

Toshiba continued to supply retailers with machines until the end of March 2008, and continued to provide technical support to the estimated one million people worldwide who owned HD DVD players and recorders. Toshiba announced a new line of stand-alone Blu-ray players as well as drives for PCs and laptops, and subsequently joined the BDA, the industry body which oversees development of the Blu-ray format.[88]

REGZA

REGZA (Real Expression Guaranteed by Amazing Architecture) is a unified television brand owned and manufactured by Toshiba. In 2010 REGZA name disappeared from the North American market, and from March 2015[89] new TVs carrying the Toshiba name are designed and produced by Compal Electronics, a Taiwanese company, which Toshiba has licensed its name to. REGZA is also used in Android-based smartphones that were developed by Fujitsu Toshiba Mobile Communications.

Chromebook

In October 2014, Toshiba released the Chromebook 2, a new version with a thinner profile and a much-improved display. The Chromebook runs exclusively on Chrome OS and gives users free Google Drive storage and access to a collection of apps and extensions at the Chrome Web Store.[90]

3D flash memory

In March 2015, Toshiba announced the development of the first 48-layer, three-dimensional flash memory. The new flash memory is based on a vertical stacking technology that Toshiba calls BiCS (Bit Cost Scaling), stores two bits of data per transistor and can store 128Gbits (16GB) per chip.[91] Toshiba's memory division was spun off as Toshiba Memory Corporation.

Environmental record

Toshiba has been judged as making "low" efforts to lessen their impact on the environment. In November 2012, they came second from the bottom in Greenpeace's 18th edition of the Guide to Greener Electronics that ranks electronics companies according to their policies on products, energy and sustainable operations.[92] Toshiba received 2.3 of a possible 10 points, with the top company (WIPRO) receiving 7.1 points. "Zero" scores were received in the categories "Clean energy policy advocacy", "Use of recycled plastics in products" and "Policy and practice on sustainable sourcing of fibres for paper".

In 2010, Toshiba reported that all of its new LCD TVs comply with the Energy Star standards and 34 models exceed the requirements by 30% or more.[93]

Toshiba also partnered with China's Tsinghua University in 2008 in order to form a research facility to focus on energy conservation and the environment.[94] The new Toshiba Energy and Environment Research Center is located in Beijing where forty students from the university will work to research electric power equipment and new technologies that will help stop the global warming process.[94] Through this partnership, Toshiba hopes to develop products that will better protect the environment and save China.[94] This contract between Tsinghua University and Toshiba originally began in October 2007 when they signed an agreement on joint energy and environment research.[94] The projects that they conduct work to reduce car pollution and to create power systems that don't negatively affect the environment.[94]

On 28 December 1970 Toshiba began the construction of unit 3 of the Fukushima Daiichi Nuclear Power Plant[95] which was damaged in the Fukushima I nuclear accidents on 14 March 2011. In April 2011, CEO Norio Sasaki declared nuclear energy would "remain as a strong option" even after the Fukushima I nuclear accidents.[96]

In late 2013, Toshiba (Japan) entered the solar power business in Germany, installing PV systems on apartment buildings.[97]

Now let's go to my notes: Congress Trade Act - China.

1. In the last year of his presidency, Bill Clinton called on Congress to help him change China's normal trade relations status with the U.S. to permanent. This would amend the Trade Act of 1974 which had the trade status of China annually reviewed to determine the best course of action.

Permanent normal trade relations

From Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia
Jump to navigationJump to search

The status of permanent normal trade relations (PNTR) is a legal designation in the United States for free trade with a foreign nation. In the United States, the name was changed from most favored nation (MFN) to PNTR in 1998.

In international trade, MFN status (or treatment) is awarded by one nation to another. It means that the receiving nation will be granted all trade advantages, such as low tariffs, that any other nation also receives. Thus, a nation with MFN status will not be discriminated against and will not be treated worse than any other nation with MFN status.[1]

Applicability

Granting of permanent normal trade relations status is automatic, except where specifically denied by law.[2]

Embargoes also apply to additional parties; see United States embargoes.

History

In 1948 the United States joined the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), the predecessor organization of the World Trade Organization. In accordance with GATT provisions the United States agreed to extend what was then called Most Favored-Nation status (MFN) to all GATT member countries. This status was also applied to some countries that were not GATT members. However, a member may opt out of its obligations by invoking the non-application provision (Article XIII of the WTO or Article XXXV of the GATT) if it determines it cannot extend GATT/WTO principles to newly acceding members for political reasons.[3]

In 1951, the U.S. Congress directed President Harry Truman to revoke MFN status to the Soviet Union and other Communist countries except for Yugoslavia.[3]:2 During the Cold War, most Communist countries were denied MFN status if they did not meet certain conditions.[1]

In December 1960, Poland was granted MFN status by President Eisenhower.[1] In 1962, Congress enacted a directive that jeopardized the MFN status of Poland and Yugoslavia; however, the directive was delayed until a new one was passed that allowed any countries with MFN to keep the status if the President determined it to be in the national interest of the United States.[1]

Title IV of the Trade Act of 1974 superseded these provision. Section 401 of Title IV requires the President to withhold MFN status from countries that had not acquired that status by the time of the law's enactment on January 3, 1975. In effect, this meant all communist countries, except Poland and Yugoslavia. Section 402, the Jackson-Vanik amendment, withholds MFN status from countries with strict restriction on freedom of emigration.[3] Countries that wish to have PNTR must fulfill two basic requirements:[citation needed] (1) comply with the Jackson-Vanik provisions of the Trade Act of 1974 that states that the President of the United States determines that a country neither denies or impedes the right or opportunity of its citizens to emigrate; and (2) reach a bilateral commercial agreement with the United States. Jackson-Vanik allows for the President to issue a yearly waiver to allow the granting of PNTR.

For many years, People's Republic of China was the most important country in this group which required an annual waiver to maintain free trade status. The waiver for the PRC had been in effect since 1980. Every year between 1989 and 1999, legislation was introduced in Congress to disapprove the President's waiver. The legislation had sought to tie free trade with China to meeting certain human rights conditions that go beyond freedom of emigration. All such attempted legislation failed to pass. The requirement of an annual waiver was inconsistent with the rules of the World Trade Organization, and for the PRC to join the WTO, Congressional action was needed to grant PNTR to the PRC. This was accomplished in late 1999, allowing the PRC to join WTO in the following year.[4]

By Act of Congress, the United States granted permanent normal trade relations (PNTR) status to Czechoslovakia (later the Czech Republic and Slovakia), Hungary, and Romania after the fall of the communist governments in those countries. The United States granted PNTR to Albania, Bulgaria, Cambodia, Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania before their countries acceded to the WTO.[3] Before it granted PNTR, the United States invoked the non-application provision against Mongolia for more than two years after it joined the WTO on January 29, 1997. It also invoked the provision against Armenia from its WTO accession on February 5, 2003, until it was granted PNTR on January 7, 2005, and with Kyrgyzstan from when it joined the WTO on December 20, 1998, until receiving PNTR on June 29, 2000.[3]

According to a 2005 Congressional Research Service report, as of 2005, only Cuba (see United States embargo against Cuba) and North Korea (see North Korea–United States relations), were specifically denied NTR status.[5] The same report said that in accordance with the Jackson–Vanik amendment, Belarus and Turkmenistan had been temporarily afforded NTR treatment by presidential waiver and that Azerbaijan, Kazakhstan, Tajikistan, and Uzbekistan were temporarily afforded NTR treatment by a presidential compliance determination.[5]

In December 2006, the U. S. granted Permanent Normal Trade Relations status to Vietnam.[3]:3[6] Vietnam had a temporary free trade status on a year-to-year waiver basis as a prerequisite for accession to the WTO since 2001.[6]

In the same year Ukraine was granted PNTR. In December 2012, President Barack Obama signed the Russia and Moldova Jackson-Vanik Repeal and Sergei Magnitsky Rule of Law Accountability Act of 2012 (Magnitsky Act) granting PNTR to Russia and Moldova.[3]

U.S. and China

In the last year of his presidency, Bill Clinton called on Congress to help him change China's normal trade relations status with the U.S. to permanent. This would amend the Trade Act of 1974 which had the trade status of China annually reviewed to determine the best course of action. The piece of legislation was introduced to the house as H.R. number 4444 on May 15, 2000 by William Reynolds Archer, a Republican Representative from Texas (he had three cosponsors). Introduce to the house the legislation referred to the Ways and Means committee in the House of Representatives to be amended and written up.[7] The legislation was introduced by saying that the bill was a top priority for the rest of the year and it was vital to the U.S. agriculture market to have access to a market that accounts for one-fifth of the world's population.[8]

The other crucial point made was the involvement the U.S. needed to help the workers of the People's Republic of China to lead better lives.[9] Congress added some important points into the legislation to make sure that when China entered the World Trade Organization it could be reprimanded for crimes against the workers of the country, and certain markets would be mutually exclusive between the two countries. The People's Republic of China's businesses had to abide by human rights for their workers as stated in the internationally recognized worker rights. To monitor the workers' rights Congress established the Congressional–Executive Commission on the People's Republic of China. The commission was to monitor acts of China which reflect compliance or violation, compile lists of persons believed to be imprisoned, detained, or tortured due to pursuit of their human rights, monitor the development of the rule of law in China, and encourage the development of programs and activities of the U.S. government and private organizations with a goal of increasing the interchange of people and ideas. The committee formed, along with the Office of the United States Trade Representative (USTR), and the International Trade Commission (ITC) was to give an annual report to the President.[7]

Congress believed that they needed to pass a bill that would help the economy stay stimulated if not have a higher growth than at the time.[10] The most productive and trouble-free way to keep the economy growing strong was to outsource and trade more with China. China was to help provide America with superior markets in industry, agriculture, and technology. Congress as whole thought that without these things America would fall behind economically and technologically to some enemies of America.[citation needed] If China did not get support from America they could go to another country that would not be so strict on their treatment of people, and they could use that country to gain access to the WTO. The down side to this was that no markets could provide and receive China's goods like the United States markets could.[8]

The International Trade Commission's report was the determination of China's impacts on United States market, and how those certain disruptions can be remedied or expanded. The ITC was to find what domestic industries were being hurt by the trade and to present how the repair could be made. This was the most important part of the bill for most of the country. The bill breaks down to depending on how the different markets in the U.S. economy are doing it can use China's markets as a catalyst to help stabilize when need be.[clarification needed]

The bill created a stir among Congress and the American people when presented because people did not believe that America could actually do anything to help regulate China's treatment of workers.[11] Aside from people's rights activists many business men believed in the bill to help flourish the different areas of industry. The legislation was passed by the House of Representatives on May 24, 2000 and by the Senate on September 19, 2000. Members of the senate wanted to add in amendments on treating their workers even better than stated in previous legislation, and to make the punishment for breaking the rules greater. Congress was up for re-election that year so due to time constraints all twenty four amendments were rejected. The President signed on Oct 10, 2000 and that day it became Public Law No: 106-286.[7]

US imports from China more than quadrupled between 2000 and 2015, increasing the decline of US manufacturing jobs.[12] Since the passing of the bill there have been three attempts to repeal the PNTR with China. The strongest attempt was in 2005 when House Rep. Bernie Sanders and 61 co-sponsors introduced a legislation that would repeal the Permanent Normal Trade Relations with China. Rep. Sanders said to the house, "anyone who takes an objective look at our trade policy with China must conclude that is an absolute failure and needs to be fundamentally overhauled". The Representative goes into numbers of the trade deficit increased and the number of American jobs being lost to our overseas competitors. One point that Sanders did not make due to time constraints and the legislation being passed so quickly was that nothing in the way China treats its workers has changed.[13]

Subject: Fremont St problem

Good day to you Mayor Goodman, wish you well,

I have lived in downtown Las Vegas for 7 years. My letter pertains to a person at the Fremont Experience who I, security, police and many others feel he must be removed and some how charged criminally for his so call freedom of speech sign. Pic included.

Security informed me that plenty of people especially parents, have complained about this schmuck, stating they are suggesting to everyone to contact you and city council and there is supposed to be a date set in the near future to address this and other problems.

This person is not part of the lottery spot system. 98% of the performers are decent people making tourist laugh and happy along with those that are respectfully entertaining children bringing joy to the kids and the parents downtown experience. During the day he is straight; by night I have seen him so stoned he could hardly sit against a wall while he thinks its a big joke getting people riled up, exchanging F yous' with them. Many times I have seen near physical confrontations by guys, fathers, mothers who would like to pound him into the concrete but can't knowing they could be arrested.

This is not a freedom of speech issue. This is an obnoxious, intimidating, threatening, premeditated knowingly intent to instigate confrontation, violence, and especially corrupting the health and welfare of children, neglect and abuse of children which this easily can be interpreted as causing harm to children as a misdemeanor, viz. multiple 100s of times daily pertaining to children.

As summer quickly approaches with the 1,000s of tourists downtown daily this can only lead to someone seriously beating up this knuckle-head only to find themselves arrested, again affecting the children.

Speaking recently to him, he claims its a joke meant to be funny. His name is Paul saying he is from Santa Monica, no one pays him to do this and said he doesn't work. I am certain you can find a way to remove and ban him from Fremont St. Judging by the stoner trash that hangs out with him at night; who knows he might even be using this as a cover for meeting people and selling drugs. Excuse the length of my notice and thank you for your service. Pic included.

P.S. When and where is the next meeting with city counsel addressing these problems.

God bless,

Ken Mallen

Study: A Hostile Home Environment Can Leave Children Emotionally Insecure

Young children pay close attention to how parents handle disagreements with each other -- whether constructively or through angry outbursts -- and a hostile approach by either parent can affect a child's feelings of emotional security, according to a University of Arizona study. The research focused on whether parents handled disagreements calmly and stayed focused on the problem at hand, or whether the argument devolved into anger, resentment, and finger pointing. "Children are very good at picking up on little nuances of how parents interact with each other," said researcher Olena Kopystynska. "So it really matters how parents express and manage their daily life challenges because that determines children's confidence in the stability and safety of their family."

Ending the War on Drugs

By Betsy Pearl and Maritza Perez

Nationwide, communities face an unprecedented rise in substance misuse fatalities. A record 63,600 overdose deaths were recorded in 2016, two-thirds of which involved opioids. To stem the tide of this crisis, some communities are doubling down on the war on drugs, despite clear evidence that increasing arrests and incarceration does not lower drug use. But an increasing number of cities are bucking the trend and adopting models that treat substance misuse as a disease, not a crime. Instead of criminalizing substance use disorders, communities are focusing on saving lives and reducing the harmful effects of drug use.

The idea of "harm reduction" may seem like common sense today, but it signifies a radical departure from traditional U.S. responses to drug use, which relied heavily on the criminal justice system. More and more cities are expanding access to clean syringes, launching safe-injection facilities, and decriminalizing possession of controlled substances. The strategies detailed in this issue brief represent promising progress toward ending a decades-old policy agenda of criminalizing substance misuse. But importantly, approaches that are limited to addressing opioid misuse—a primarily white phenomenon—risk perpetuating racial disparities in the justice system. Cities must develop inclusive approaches that treat all substance use disorders—not just opioid misuse—as a disease, not a crime.

Budget Cuts Force IRS To Halt Some Private Letter Rulings

Reduced funding for the Internal Revenue Service has resulted in staffing cuts and, consequently, a suspension of certain conferences with taxpayers and private letter rulings in the estate tax area.

Fed. Tax Reform Could Spike State Revenues, Think Tank Says

Federal tax policy changes proposed by President Donald Trump and GOP lawmakers could dramatically increase income tax burdens across the country if legislatures don't act to adjust their own laws, according to a report released Wednesday by the Tax Foundation.

IMMIGRATION

Dems Ask DHS Not To Split Up Families At Border

Two sets of congressional Democrats on Wednesday urged the U.S. Department of Homeland Security against pursuing a policy of separating parents and children as a deterrent against those seeking to enter the U.S. by crossing the nation’s southern border.

NY, Mass. AGs Join Fight To Bar Trump's Latest Travel Ban

New York Attorney General Eric T. Schneiderman and Massachusetts Attorney General Maura Healey on Thursday separately announced that they will join state attorneys general for Washington and Minnesota and others in arguing that an injunction against President Donald Trump’s now-moot Jan. 27 immigration ban applies to the newest executive order.

UC Irvine, ABA Back Immigrant Bond Ruling At 9th Circ.

The University of California, Irvine School of Law, the American Bar Association and others urged the Ninth Circuit on Wednesday to uphold a district court decision forcing immigration judges and officials to look at a detainee’s ability to pay bond, flight risk and other factors, saying vulnerable immigrants will be punished if the ruling is struck.

Advocates Ask FCC To Refuse Fox-NY Post Ownership Waiver
Several advocacy groups on Wednesday opposed a request from Fox for an exception from the Federal Communications Commission to allow the continued co-ownership of New York and New Jersey TV stations and the New York Post newspaper, saying the commission should seek feedback on the issue.

FCC Gets Local Pushback On 5G Infrastructure Preemption
The Federal Communications Commission is fielding feedback from several states and municipalities across the country urging caution over a request that it overrule local barriers to deploying next-generation wireless infrastructure, with Pennsylvania and Virginia among those raising questions Thursday about federal intervention.

EXPERT ANALYSIS

9th Circ. Legal Concerns Influence Trump's New Travel Ban
President Donald Trump's new executive order banning travel to the U.S. by certain people from six Muslim-majority countries was clearly drafted to address structural defects and constitutional concerns outlined by the Ninth Circuit. However, it is unclear whether the changes will be sufficient to withstand legal challenges, says Kari Konikowski Blackman of Foster LLP.

Here Comes The Rule-Making Revolution
The business of agency rule-making — a significant source of the regulatory burden that financial institutions bear — is about to undergo a significant makeover. Those who have been around financial regulation through various business and political cycles know, however, that federal agencies can sometimes revert to the path of least resistance to reach the same bottom line, says Thomas Vartanian of Dechert LLP.

Assessing The Prospect Of A Bitcoin ETF As Deadline Looms
This week, the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission must either approve the Winklevoss Bitcoin Trust ETF as the first bitcoin exchange-traded fund in the United States, or reject it, because the SEC is finally out of extensions to make a decision. An approval would likely be a game changer for both the digital currency and the global financial markets, says Nicole Tate-Naghi of Goodwin Procter LLP.

5 Ways To Fix The False Claims Act

In the mortgage industry, allegations abound that the U.S. Department of Justice has abused its power by cajoling and pressuring False Claims Act settlements with questionable legal foundation on the bet that few want to be sued by the federal government. Lenders may be more willing to sue and be sued by the government if the FCA more clearly defined what constitutes a violation, say Krista Cooley and Laurence Platt of Mayer Brown LLP. Read more »

Detecting Substance Abuse in the Workplace

Las Vegas, NV | December 5, 2017

Over 15% of the United States workforce has self-reported being under the influence of alcohol in the workplace at least once in the last year, according to according to the National Institutes of Health. Add prescription drugs, illegal drugs and other impairing substances to the mix—particularly in light of nationwide legalization and decriminalization of certain drugs—and it seems only reasonable to suspect that this trend will rise.

The cost of impairment in the workplace is enormous—due to safety concerns, liability risks, lost productivity and increased health care costs.

This course is designed to help students acquire the knowledge, skill and ability to determine if impairment exists and, if it does, whether the impairment is caused by a medical condition, alcohol, drugs or a combination of drugs. We will utilize a known pattern of signs and symptoms along with simple divided attention tests to be able to articulate the evidence of impairment.

Members of the Board:

I am delighted to tell you that yesterday afternoon we closed on our New Markets Tax Credit transaction. This required tremendous effort across the organization and the larger improvement project team, as well as excellent collaboration with City staff. That relationship is as strong as ever.

Here are some things you should know about our current status….

- The project is now fully funded, with all monies in a controlled disbursement account. We are within the Board-approved parameters for use of Museum equity and bank financing. The construction contract has been executed with all subcontractors at prevailing wages.

- We received all necessary approvals from local, state, and national historic review agencies. The building permit has been received from the City of Las Vegas. CORE, our general contractor, will begin construction on Monday, August 14th.

- We have met all of the requirements for Alterations and Tenant Improvements under our lease with the City. Most significantly, the $6M re-investment requirement will indeed be satisfied, enabling us to preserve our long-term lease under the current terms.

As the schedule now stands, we anticipate the first floor experiences to be completed in late December. A training and soft opening period will follow, with an expected public opening of the new 1st floor spaces on February 14, 2018, in conjunction with our anniversary. The Speakeasy and Distillery will be completed by mid-March. Soft opening and health department review will follow, with an expected public opening on April 17, 2018.

More details will be provided for all of this at our September meeting, along with our progress on other fronts, such as Advisory Council expansion. Please be on the lookout for an invitation to attend a mixer with local Advisory Council members the evening of October 12th.

So much of our progress and success - in every area of the organization - is a direct result of Board guidance and support. Thank you for all that you do!

Raleigh, NC | May 7-11, 2018

Successful prosecution of criminals often depends on key evidence collected at the scene of the crime. As advancements in the field of forensic science continue to reach new levels, so has the need for professional crime scene investigations.

Course participants will learn today's best scientific practices in the identification, preservation, and collection of evidence at crime scenes from some of the leading professionals in the field. A blend of classroom instruction and hands-on practical application will give participants the ability to confidently process a crime scene. Areas of study will include:

- Crime Scene Management

- Crime Scene Photography
- Latent Print Processing and Recovery
- Processing and Recovery for Biological Evidence
- Digital Evidence Recovery
- Scene Diagramming / Note Taking / Report Writing / Testimony
- Major Forensic Laboratory Capabilities
- Best Practices - Chain of Custody

All participants will receive a fully stocked evidence collection kit, providing the supplies necessary to professionally process crime scenes upon completion of the course.

The U.S. Department of State posted a new rule Tuesday that amends the definition of immediate family for a handful of visas applicable to diplomats and their kin, making it harder for the adult children of diplomats to get visas directly tied to their parents' status.

NATIVE AMERICAN

Trump Adviser Says He's Not Privatizing Tribal Land

An Oklahoma Republican lawmaker who was tapped to lead President-elect Donald Trump's so-called Native American Coalition issued a statement on Monday to "alleviate any concern that Indian country should fear the federal government privatizing their land," saying recent news coverage has distorted his goals under the incoming administration.

TELECOMMUNICATIONS

AT&T, Dish Say Broadcasters Should Carry Next-Gen TV Costs

Pay-TV providers should not be saddled with costs associated with new over-the-air broadcasting standards known as next-gen TV, representatives for Dish Network and AT&T Services Inc. told the Federal Communications Commission in a recent conference call.

Wireless Bids For Broadcast Spectrum Again Fall Short

Bids to convert 108 MHz of spectrum from broadcast to mobile broadband use failed to meet a $42 billion clearing target by a wide margin, triggering a soon-to-be-announced fourth stage of bidding under lowered targets, the FCC announced Monday.

EXPERT ANALYSIS

Anti-Money Laundering Enforcement In 2017: What To Expect

Over the past two years, financial regulatory bodies in the United States and Europe have increasingly emphasized consumer due diligence by financial institutions as a means to combat money laundering and terrorist financing, especially with respect to "high-risk" products. This trend is expected to continue in 2017, say attorneys with K&L Gates LLP.

Big-Time Litigation Funding Vs. Consumer Legal Funding

Some have attacked consumer legal funding through over-regulation and obscured any differences between big-time litigation funding — like the Gawker case — and consumer legal funding. But mixing these two together is a recipe for bad public policy, says Jeremy Kidd, associate professor at Mercer University's Walter F. George School of Law.

Fallout From DOD Stance On Waste, Fraud And Abuse Tips

The U.S. Department of Defense recently issued a class deviation to the Federal Acquisition Regulation that bars the awarding of contracts to contractors that prohibit their employees from reporting waste, fraud and abuse to federal officials. The new rule could increase contractor liability and create tricky situations with respect to business-sensitive or trade secret information, say Dismas Locaria and Melanie Jones Totman of Venable LLP.

New Form I-9 Means More Immigration-Related Change In 2017

U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services' revised Form I-9 offers new features and imposes some different requirements. Some modifications enhance the form, while some may result in more technical violations, particularly for employers who continue to use paper versions of the form, say Christine Samsel and Hannah Caplan of Brownstein Hyatt Farber Schreck LLP.

Confirming PURPA Protections For Renewable Producers

The Public Utilities Regulatory Policy Act was enacted to encourage the development of cogeneration and small power production facilities. FERC's declarations on PURPA issued in response to the petition for enforcement filed by Windham Solar may reinvigorate the development of qualifying facilities in states located within organized markets, says Heather Curlee of Wilson Sonsini Goodrich & Rosati.

LEGAL INDUSTRY

5 Things Lawyers Should Do Before Lobbing DQ Motions

A bid to disqualify opposing counsel can deliver a body blow to a case, but it also comes with the risk of irritating your client and the judge. Here, we look at five things you should do before trying to kick your opponent off a case.

Innovative Corporate Counsel: Andrew Garard

In his nine years as the legal chief of U.K. broadcaster and producer ITV, Andrew Garard has reshaped the way his company thinks about outside counsel and corporate social responsibility, earning him a spot among Law360's Innovative Corporate Counsel.

Alston & Bird's Bob Dole Worked Trump On Taiwan, Docs Say

Alston & Bird lobbyist and former Kansas senator Bob Dole has been acting as a foreign representative for the government of Taiwan looking to establish ties with the Trump administration, according to disclosure documents filed last week just before an unusual and striking phone call between President-elect Donald Trump and Taiwan's president.

11th Circ. Will Post Oral Argument Recordings Online

The Eleventh Circuit on Monday revealed a plan to post audio recordings of oral arguments on its website beginning in April 2017, joining almost all of its fellow federal appeals courts in making oral arguments readily available online.

It is a start. Thanks. One answer may be in doubt and that is the question of home grow. The ballot questtion seems clear on that to me but I am told that there is more enabling language somewhere which puts a 25 mile limit on proximity to a dispensary which would prohibit it. Seems to me the plain language of the Question should control so I am confused.

Karen: Please look into that one thing for now, please?

Subject: Request for assistance legalized marijuana passage briefing

Good afternoon Ms. Duddlesten,
Councilman Coffin wanted a briefing on the passage of Ballot Question 2 that was just passed by the Nevada voters.
Absent any Bills introduced at the next Nevada Legislative Session, Councilman Coffin would still like a briefing as soon as possible.

As of January 1, 2017, it would be legal for anyone 21 and older to possess an ounce of marijuana or an eighth of an ounce of marijuana concentrate.
Correct? That is our understanding. The CAO should provide details.

An adult may grow up to six plants for personal use inside their home? YES, that is our understanding, however there is also a cap of 12 plants per household.
Correct? Will this be added for Code Enforcement to enforce? This is yet to be determined.

Who's in charge of legalized marijuana regulations-the Department of Taxation or Department of Health? The Department of Taxation. They have not yet staffed the new department but Joline Smith, 775-684-2029 may have more information.

Would city licensing fees be increased on recreational as opposed to medical dispensaries? This is yet to be determined and would have to be addressed both in enabling legislation or local ordinance.

What is the mechanism for medical to convert to recreational sales? This will need to be determined on temporary state regulations and local ordinances.

Has the state of Nevada decided how to divide the reported 80-recreational licenses that would be made available? Not to our knowledge.

Is it true that for the first 18 months, only existing medical marijuana establishments could apply to open recreational dispensaries? Yes, the Act states that only those medical marijuana establishments that hold a State Registrations Certificate may apply for a recreational license. (does not stipulate that they are licensed in their respective jurisdiction)

Define existing (licensed, built or in process). – No information available at this time as the Act only mentions State Registration Certificates.

Is city staff prepared with licensing regulations, staffing, and enforcement? We have been working with Senator Farley on the issues that may be addressed in additional legislation and have a staff working group preparing issues that will require input and direction from the CAO, CMO and City Council.

Since this will move fast on January 1, 2017, whatever briefing you can put together would be greatly appreciated. The State has 12 months from Jan 1, 2017 to start accepting applications. The Department of Taxation issued a press release that they would be working on temporary regulations. We have made contact at both the legislative level and the Department to request to be involved in discussions.

Thank you in advance.

Dodd-Frank Repeal Bill Passes Out Of House Committee

A measure aimed at repealing the Dodd-Frank Act was approved Tuesday by the House Financial Services Committee in a vote mostly along party lines that sends the bill to the House floor for a full vote.

NY Cybersecurity Rules Could Push Other Regulators

Banks, insurers and other financial institutions operating in New York state will have to take strong measures to protect against data breaches and other cyberattacks under first-of-their-kind rules proposed Tuesday, and experts say that other states and even the federal government may follow New York's lead.

House Rep. Tries To Force IRS Chief Impeachment Vote

Conservative House Republicans will try to force a vote this week on their attempts to oust IRS Commissioner John Koskinen, introducing a four-count impeachment resolution Tuesday over his alleged noncompliance with congressional investigations into IRS targeting of conservative groups.

9th Circ. Nixes Part Of Ariz. Air Pollution Plan

A Ninth Circuit panel on Monday partially rejected the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency's approval of Arizona's plan for airborne particulate matter around Maricopa County, saying the EPA needed to further the part of the plan addressing contingency measures.

House Votes To Lower ACA Out-Of-Pocket Tax Deductibility

House Republicans, with some Democratic support, voted on Tuesday to lower the Affordable Care Act threshold for claiming out-of-pocket medical expenses on taxes, claiming that the measure would provide relief to millions of Americans.

Restaurant Groups Urge High Court To Review Tip Pool Rule

A handful of restaurant associations recently urged the U.S. Supreme Court to take up an appeal of a Ninth Circuit ruling that the U.S. Department of Labor can stop employers from tip pooling, saying that the rule hurts minority workers and that a circuit split on the agency's rulemaking puts restaurants in a costly bind.

NCAA Pulls Events From North Carolina Over Bathroom Law

The NCAA announced Monday that it is pulling several marquee events from North Carolina, including the men's college basketball tournament, citing "cumulative actions taken by the state concerning civil rights protections" such as the state's controversial transgender bathroom law.

Swiss Supreme Court OKs Sharing Of Bank Data With Dutch

Switzerland's highest court overturned a lower court's decision barring the country's tax authorities from providing banking information on Dutch UBS AG clients to the Netherlands, saying Monday that a request from Dutch tax authorities is not prohibited by a treaty between the two countries.

ANALYSIS

Reviewing Clinton's Immigration Positions As Election Nears

Although Hillary Clinton hasn't been too vocal on business immigration issues such as the H-1B visa program this election cycle, it's worth noting the Democratic nominee has staked out some ambitious positions in other areas, including going beyond President Barack Obama's executive actions on deportation. Here, Law360 provides an overview of where the former secretary of state stands on the hot-button issue.

The AIA At 5: New Rules Bring New Patent Filing Strategies

The enactment of the America Invents Act five years ago this week fundamentally altered filing rules for patent applications, but those changes have in many ways have had less of an effect on patent prosecution than the law's new proceedings for challenging patents, attorneys say.

FCC Walking Fine Line With Station Ownership Move

The Federal Communications Commission will likely be forced to defend its recent decision to eliminate a key break in the way it calculates restrictions on media ownership, and experts said rapidly changing market conditions could make the changes a tough sell.

Retail Investment Disclosure Vote May Leave Firms In A Bind

Firms that sell packaged investment products face a year-end deadline to start giving investors documents summarizing costs and risks, but attorneys foresee even more difficulty if European Union lawmakers vote Wednesday to reject detailed rules for the disclosures.

SoCalGas To Pay $4M To End LA's Suit Over Huge Gas Leak

Southern California Gas Co. agreed to pay $4 million to settle criminal charges brought by Los Angeles County alleging the utility didn't properly notify authorities about a massive natural gas leak at a storage facility that displaced thousands of area residents, county prosecutors said Tuesday.

EPA Asks DC Circ. For En Banc Review In Boiler Rule

The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency on Monday asked the D.C. Circuit to grant en banc review of a panel's July ruling that largely sided with environmentalists in challenges to the EPA's emissions rules for boilers and incinerators.

EPA Must Release Docs In Effluent Rule Row, Groups Say

Industry groups challenging the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency's power plant effluent rule pressed the Fifth Circuit on Monday to force the agency to turn over documents for the litigation's administrative record, saying the agency's contention it reasonably withheld documents containing "confidential business information" doesn't hold water.

Legal Scholars Object To House Climate Change Subpoenas

A group of law professors and lawyers on Monday urged House Republicans to drop subpoenas targeting climate science groups and the Massachusetts and New York attorneys general, saying a committee's investigation into an alleged assault on the free speech of fossil fuel companies is itself an assault on free speech.

Okla., Chamber Say 10th Circ. Right Venue In Water Rule Row

Oklahoma and business groups led by the U.S. Chamber of Commerce on Monday told the Tenth Circuit it has authority to hear their challenges to the federal government's controversial Clean Water Rule, despite a Sixth Circuit finding that it has jurisdiction over the matter.

When Kirkland & Ellis LLP brings the entire fleet of 17 attorneys at Bancroft PLLC into its fold Oct. 1, the firm will gain a good deal more legal talent than former U.S. Solicitor General Paul Clement alone. Here, five other Bancroft attorneys that have turned heads with their legal prowess.

Scalia Won Battle Over Statutory Interpretation, Kagan Says

U.S. Supreme Court Associate Justice Elena Kagan admitted Tuesday that the late Justice Antonin Scalia had, over his career, succeeded in impressing his unique view of statutory interpretation on even his most intractable colleagues, elevating the once low standing of textual analysis to something akin to reverence in the American legal system.

Pro Bono Firm Of 2016: Arnold & Porter

Arnold & Porter's defense of Planned Parenthood against illegal fetal-tissue sale allegations as well as its victories for an innocent man on death row and mentally ill defendants facing lengthy jail terms before trial are just three of the reasons the firm landed a place on Law360's Pro Bono Firms of 2016.

Rainmaker Q&A: McDermott's Ira Coleman

The hardest part of remaining a rainmaker is that every year, on Jan. 1, all of your columns go to zero and you have to start all over again. I use this time as an opportunity to reflect and get re-energized. I feel an obligation to myself and to my clients to do more and be better, says Ira Coleman, global head of McDermott Will & Emery’s corporate and transactional group.

Rainmaker Q&A: Baer & Troff's James Baer

Being a rainmaker is less about being a good lawyer and more about developing your business. Like brushing your teeth, you have to do it every single day. It requires constant attention and must be regarded with high importance, says James Baer, principal and founding partner at Baer & Troff LLP.

So much done and much more to do.

Hi my friends,

WOW, what a January. We had our State of the City; Jake won his first rodeo check for placing 1st riding in the flags contest, our United States Senator Dean Heller popped by our pasta dinner, attended lots of groundbreakings, rode Big Red in the Martin Luther King Jr. parade and last but certainly not least, I was invited to the White House.

"A Conversation with the Women in America"

It was an honor to be invited to The White House to represent our great city and women in politics as part of "Conversations with the Women of America." I was one of the panelists; our panel discussed "National Security and Public Safety." Our President, Donald Trump surprised all of us with an unannounced visit. What a remarkable President & Administration. Thank you Ward 6 for allowing me to represent you. I was so incredibly humbled to be invited to Washington, D.C. We even received chocolate White House swag with our President's signature.

State of the City

Martin Luther King Jr. Day Parade

It was honored to be able to ride on Big Red, the city's historic fire engine, spending time in the parade celebrating and honoring the great work of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr was great. It was a beautiful experience to get to meet great people who are working so diligently to continue to build a better community for all our residents. I'm pictured with Dr. Lisa Morris Hibbler, the city's Director of Youth Development and Social Innovation. Her department had Safe-key kids participating in the parade as well. It was a lovely day all around.

GROUNDBREAKINGS

Our city is growing rapidly. I attended the groundbreaking of the future Kyle Canyon interchange, the new Albertson's shopping center going in along Hualapai Way and the Clark County 215 East and for the new Centennial Hills Skilled Nursing Facility. This commercial center and this facility are a great step in bringing needed goods and services to the residents in this corner of the northwest. .

Pasta at my place

Our Ward 6 office travels to Washington D.C. often to ask for help with BLM land that really should be designated to our great city. Without question, our federal delegation is always there to help us, take meetings and figure solutions out for Las Vegas. Thank you Senator Heller for popping by for some pasta last week and always exuding great hospitality to us in your D.C. office.

Ride Along with our Marshals

I spent the day riding with one of our City Marshals exploring our homeless corridor, the tunnels under our city, park bathroom challenges and just experiencing a day in the life of our Las Vegas City Marshals office. Thank you.

We have so much going on in February so mark your calendars.

Tonight: Meet me at the Northwest Area Command Metro Police Station at 7 pm 9850 W Cheyenne Ave, Las Vegas, NV 89129

My family

Jake took 1st place in flags & received his first rodeo check!!! Placed 3rd in his first derby truck race with his cub scouts wolf pack team.

Jayden loves ballet, beauty days and super shero training on horses.

Jemma, the baby, just wants to be held and kissed by her dog Dakota.

My four-year-old autistic twins Morrigan & Mara are learning their ABC's, they love music and animals. These Grand-

Princesses of mine are making steady developments. Morrigan & Mara have a crazy cat named Gomez, he follows the girls everywhere and gets frantic when they leave for school every morning. Gomez sleeps with them and sits on the bathtub ledge while they bath. This cat loves his girls.

My mom enjoys ghost haunting, and she's having lots of fun conducting ghost investigations.
My beautiful daughters Sheena & Savanah are raising their families, working and going to school. Sheena is getting her bachelors in Deaf studies, and Savanah is going into nursing. My son-in-law David and Kyle work their buns off to provide for their family, and I thank them for always taking care of their families. David is in the security industry, and Kyle works for AMR. Both my son-in-laws are first responders.

Big News in January

This story has weighed heavy on my heart, and if you know me, then you knew that. I always dare to doubt, my trust is with the people. And I dare you to doubt as well.

In the case of the Bundy's; while a battle was won, the fight continues. Most folks only know what the media, I might remind you, "fake news" has reported about the Bunkerville incident. I was there for 12 days driving back & forth daily. The truth was never reported just a narrative by a specific criminal with authority, named Daniel P Love.

After all the years, trials, accusations, and media smear campaigns. It took awhile for me to process that the incidents that took place in Bunkerville in April 2014 are finally over at least for Cliven, Ryan, Ammon Bundy and Ryan Payne.

I wish to applaud Judge Navarro for confirming that when it comes to the pursuit of justice, the ends don't justify the means. That the due process safeguards in the Constitution are there for a reason; to guarantee that not only do we all get our day in court, that the day is a fair one. Something that is not possible when prosecutors withhold crucial evidence from the defense.

I now implore Judge Navarro to act once again in the interest of justice, by dismissing the remaining charges against the other defendant's still awaiting trial and/or plead out under these egregious acts and misconduct of a United States prosecutor, Prosecutor Steven Myhre. It is clear in her ruling that prosecutorial misconduct severely compromises these cases. Merely put, "Enough is enough." This prosecution must end.

But the pursuit of Justice should not end there. It shall not stop until the Justice Dept. completes a thorough review and investigation of all parties to this matter from the US Attorney's office in Nevada, The Bureau of Land Management, (Daniel P Love) and any other officials who breached the trust placed in them by the citizens. Until these people are held accountable, I will join with patriots across the country in continuing to shine a spotlight on their unlawful actions.

As for the Bundy family, and all the men & women that stood up to an overreaching oppressive government & a murderous agency, I wish them Godspeed in being able to put their lives back together. I also pray for all of us to be blessed that our neighbors would take a stand for each of us if an oppressive rogue agent came after us.

Subject: Apr 19, CMS 2016 new Hospital CoPs for Pharmacy and Medication

Good morning,

In 2016, the CMS issued a 45-page memo announcing many changes to the hospital CoP pharmacy standards. It includes changes to ten tag numbers or sections, compounding of medication and beyond use date (BUD), and to bring them into alignment with acceptable standards of practice.

There have also been many changes in the nursing section of the CoPs that address medication usage. This includes changes to timing of medication, self-administered medication, compounding, bloód, and safe opioid use. CMS is now issuing a deficiency report showing when the pharmacy is cited for being out of compliance. Additionally, the CMS interpretive guidelines address pharmacy related standards and medication management, which is not only a significant issue with CMS but also with The Joint Commission. Also, for the first time, CMS has mentioned that nursing needs to be aware of some of the pharmacy standards and vice versa.

Medication error is one of the biggest areas of concern in hospitals today. According to CMS, around 1.9 million inpatients have to suffer from drug related adverse outcomes, which accounts for almost 5% of all readmissions. Around 838,000 outpatients have drug related adverse events. Hospitals that spènd more resources on medication issues generally have lower rates. The stakes have never been higher for hospitals to prevent patient re-admissions.

Join expert speaker Sue Dill Calloway, RN, MSN, JD, in this Live Webinar—"CMS 2016 New Pharmacy and Medication Hospital CoP Standards" on Tuesday, April 19 at 1 pm ET, to identify the top problematic areas in pharmacy standards and medication management and get practical strategies to overcome these problems. Get a better understanding of verbal orders for medication, NS standing orders, order for medications, and policy required by CMS for high risk drugs, and more!

Plus, you'll get 2 AAPC-approved CEUs for attending this 2-hour session!

Session Objectives:

- Why hospitals that receive Medícare/Medicaíd reimbursement must follow the medication guidelines for all patients.
- Identify the CMS requirements on BUD and compounding.
- Comprehend the CMS' various requirements for pharmacy policies and procedures.
- Understand why CMS requires a policy for high risk drugs such as double checks or dose limits.
- How to locate the CMS Manual?
- New and revised standards, regulations, and laws put forth by CMS, TJC and the federal government.
- Review the CMS 45 page memo regarding pharmacy and medication changes. Also, understand the final changes.
- Discuss the standardization of prescribing and communication practices.

Session Agenda:

- Pharmaceutical services requirements
- Common problematic pharmacy standards
- Standards of care
- Recent CMS memos: safe injection practices, infection control breaches, luer misconnections, insulin pens
- Meeting the needs of patients
- Condition or standard level deficiencies
- Required policies and procedures
- Dispensing and administration of medications
- Pharmacy personnel requirements
- Monitoring effects of medications

- Compounding of drugs
    - The Drug Quality and Securíty Act (DQSA)
    - Outsourcing facilities
    - Use of compounding pharmacies
    - Compounding practices and quality control
    - BUD, packaging and labeling of medications
- Operating roóm anesthesía carts and American Socíety of Anesthesiologists guideline
- Patient self-administration of drugs
- Nursing tag 405 and additional resource
    - Compounded medications and BUD
    - Safe injection practices
    - Compounded sterile preparations(CSP)
    - Immediate-use CSP and one hour rule
- And more!

Subject: 5.11.17 update on Mike Bolognini

The following update was provided by Bev this morning on how Mike is doing…

He is doing well. Has pain but managing with non-narcotic drugs. He slept well and has been up walking already this morning. The doctor was just in and if all stays status quo, he will be discharged this afternoon. He said surgery was textbook and all nerves were spared! They will probably have him up and walking in an hour or so. Mike is awake and talking boats with Bev's brother.

Several individuals have asked for the address in California to send cards, flowers and/or food. They will be in California 8- 10 days (if Mike does well, they may go home early) but will not have access to the mailbox at the apartment they have rented, so please send all cards to their home address (7421 Oak Grove Avenue, Las Vegas, NV 89117).

As far as sending flowers and/or food, if the order has not already been placed for delivery to the apartment, it is requested to wait until they return home to Las Vegas. They thank you all for your kind thoughts, prayers and well wishes for Mike's speedy recovery.

Law360 Names Practice Groups Of The Year
Law360 congratulates the winners of its 2016 Practice Group of the Year awards, the law firms that racked up victories in litigation and closed the big deals to make their mark among clients and throughout the legal industry.

The Firms That Dominated In 2016
Law360's Firms of the Year rose above the competition in 2016 by earning a combined 20 Practice Group of the Year awards on the strength of work that helped their clients attain game-changing judgments and close record deals.

Analysis
Obama Leaves Behind Mixed Legacy On Bank Regulations
When President Barack Obama exits office this month, he will leave behind a far safer banking system than the one he inherited in 2009, but observers say that for all of the sweeping changes his administration put in place, his legacy on financial regulation will be mixed.

Analysis
Fintech Firms Worry Trump Tax Plan Will Leave Them Behind
Plans laid out by President-elect Donald Trump and the Republican-led Congress to advance corporate-only tax reform without simultaneously tackling individual income taxes has financial-technology startups and other entrepreneurs worried about staying competitive against larger corporations in 2017.

Analysis
Future Of Wellness Program Regs Murky After Block Denied
New Equal Employment Opportunity Commission rules setting parameters for employer-sponsored wellness programs took effect Jan. 1, days after surviving a preliminary injunction request rooted in worries they threaten worker privacy. The rules' long-term future, however, remains in doubt, as the judge left the door open for a permanent injunction down the road based on the rules' "complex interaction" with various federal laws.

Rail Unions Sue Christie, NJ Transit Over Engineer DUI Law

A pair of railroad labor unions filed suit Monday in New Jersey federal court to undo a state law that prohibits New Jersey Transit engineers from operating passenger trains if they have a suspended or revoked driver's license due to a DUI conviction, saying it is preempted by federal law.

EMPLOYMENT

Ky. Gov. Signs Fast-Tracked Right-To-Work Bill

Kentucky became the 27th so-called right-to-work state on Saturday when Gov. Matt Bevin signed a bill making it illegal to require that workers pay union dues as a condition of employment, four days after it was introduced by a new Republican majority in the Kentucky House of Representatives.

OSHA Injury Reporting Rule, Database Ripped By Chamber

The U.S. Chamber of Commerce and other industry groups are looking to prevent the Occupational Safety and Health Administration from implementing its injury and illness recordkeeping reporting rule, saying the proposed online database violates businesses' First Amendment rights and oversteps OSHA's authority.

NY Aims To Ban Wells Fargo-Styled Scammers From Banking

New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo pitched banning from the banking and insurance industries "bad actors" who commit frauds like Wells Fargo & Co.'s opening of thousands of unauthorized accounts to boost its sales numbers, according to a proposal Sunday from the governor's State of the State address.

NLRA Preempts Ill. Town's Right-To-Work Law, Judge Say

An Illinois town can't enforce a union-weakening "right-to-work" ordinance because it's preempted by federal labor law, an Illinois federal judge ruled on Saturday.

Ex-Pa. Justices Drop Judicial Retirement Age Vote Challenge

The firm representing two former Pennsylvania Supreme Court justices in their fight against what they argued was a misleading ballot referendum to raise the mandatory retirement age for state judges said Friday it would not appeal a recent decision dismissing their challenge.

Unions Cite Ill. Judge's RTW Ruling In Ky. County Appeal

A group of Kentucky unions, including chapters of the AFL-CIO, told the Sixth Circuit on Monday that a recent Illinois federal judge's ruling that struck down a local right-to-work ordinance supports their argument that the appellate court incorrectly upheld a similar ordinance enacted by Hardin County, Kentucky.

PRIVACY & CONSUMER PROTECTION

11th Circ. Won't Revive Privacy Suits Over Fla. Driver Info

The Eleventh Circuit on Monday affirmed the dismissal of a Florida couple's cases against local governments and their workers over allegedly improper access of their personal information through state driver and motor vehicle records, ruling that their claims are time-barred.

5th Circ. Asked To End Block Of Transgender Bathroom Rule

The U.S. government on Friday asked the Fifth Circuit to overturn an injunction blocking an Obama administration rule incorporating gender identity discrimination as part of sex discrimination under Title IX, calling the injunction overbroad and unnecessary.

DHS Says Election System Is 'Critical Infrastructure'

U.S. Department of Homeland Security Secretary Jeh Johnson on Friday announced that he was designating the county's election systems as critical infrastructure, saying that the move will make the systems a priority for DHS protection, in the wake of increasingly sophisticated cyberattacks.

Sikorsky, DOD Get 9th Circ. Reversal Of FOIA Document Bid

The Ninth Circuit on Friday reversed a Freedom of Information Act order requiring Sikorsky to hand over defense contracting documents to the American Small Business League, finding that certain information involving the aircraft manufacturer is protected from disclosure to competitors.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Feds Revise Export Controls On Spacecraft

The U.S. departments of State and Commerce on Monday issued final rules adjusting export controls on satellites and other similar spacecraft and related equipment, loosening restrictions on exports of certain remote imaging devices, among other changes.

Commerce To Form Trade Enforcement Advisory Council

The U.S. Department of Commerce is set to establish an advisory council on trade enforcement to make recommendations about how to ensure compliance from trade partners and to enhance the country's commercial competitiveness, according to a notice in the Federal Register set to publish on Tuesday.

US Raps China For Shortcomings In IP, Steel, Antitrust Policy

Nearing the end of its tenure, the Obama administration on Monday gave a stern rebuke to China for its failure to obey a litany of World Trade Organization rules, ripping Beijing for its shortcomings in intellectual property rights enforcement, shady competition laws and protectionist steel policies.

NY, Entergy Strike Deal To Close Indian Point Nuke Plant

New York state officials and Entergy Corp. said Monday that they've brokered a deal to shut down the Indian Point nuclear plant just north of New York City by 2021, ending a lengthy fight over a facility opponents say poses environmental and safety risks to the largest metropolitan area in the U.S.

TELECOMMUNICATIONS

Groups Urge FCC Review Of Wireless Roaming Charges

The Federal Communications Commission should examine the impact of international roaming fees from background data on smartphones to ensure wireless customers aren't being taken advantage of, a group of consumer advocates said Friday.

Blackouts Show Need For Retransmission Reform, FCC Told

The American Television Alliance pushed the Federal Communications Commission on Friday to consider again its rules guiding negotiations between pay-TV providers and broadcasters, saying widespread programming blackouts demonstrate that current rules aren't protecting the public.

FCC Warns TV Stations Over Political Transparency Issues

The Federal Communications Commission on Friday reprimanded several TV stations for failing to follow requirements designed to ensure transparency about political advertising in 2014 and 2016, clarifying its rules and declining to pursue enforcement but also warning of possible future action.

EXPERT ANALYSIS

FCPA Predictions For 2017

Everyone is predicting major changes in the U.S. Department of Justice's Foreign Corrupt Practices Act enforcement. I do not share this view. Frankly, FCPA enforcement is more bipartisan than other controversial enforcement programs, and the DOJ's FCPA program is very profitable, says Michael Volkov, CEO of The Volkov Law Group LLC and a former federal prosecutor.

An Unwelcome Gift From The IRS On Conservation Easements

Just before Christmas, the IRS issued Notice 2017-10, declaring some conservation easement donations to be "listed transactions," and giving a chill to year-end giving plans. The agency's move was arbitrary and ham-fisted, made without opportunity for constructive comment, and endangers this vital conservation funding mechanism, say Ronald Levitt and David Wooldridge of Sirote & Permutt PC.

Easing The Process For Requesting Experimental Drugs

The 21st Century Cures Act passed last month includes a key provision that will require pharmaceutical companies to publicly provide policies for evaluating experimental drugs requests. This law ensures that seriously ill patients in search of their last hope will at least know how to contact pharmaceutical companies, say Ross Galin and Aaron Shapiro of O'Melveny & Myers LLP.

LEGAL INDUSTRY

Firm Leaders Tepid On Economy But Expect Growth, Citi Finds

Law firm leaders have a tepid outlook on the strength of the U.S. economy and the health of the legal industry for the first half of 2017, according to a Monday report from Citi Private Bank, but remain more cautious about what to expect on a global scale.

Dewey Judge Seeks DA Input On Cooperator Deal Testimony

The New York state judge overseeing the upcoming retrial of two former Dewey & LeBoeuf LLP executives on Monday gave prosecutors until the end of the week to respond to a defense motion seeking to grill the government's star witness about the circumstances that led him to get a new plea deal in exchange for his ongoing cooperation.

Alleged Law Firm Hackers Hit With SEC Injunction

A New York federal judge on Monday granted a request by the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission for a preliminary injunction and asset freeze against four Chinese hackers accused of reaping $4 million in illegal profits using insider information about pending corporate deals hacked from the computer systems of two top New York law firms.

Supreme Court Won't Review Calif., NJ Admission Restrictions

An advocacy group dedicated to breaking down jurisdictional practice barriers for lawyers lost on Monday the final round of challenges to rules in California and New Jersey on out-of-state attorneys.

Howrey Trustee Aims To Collect From 2 More Ex-Partners

Howrey LLP's trustee filed two new cases against former partners of the long-defunct firm over unpaid tax obligations, claiming in a pair of adversary proceedings Monday that the European partners had skipped out on their payments and contractual obligations.

Issue 198 – June 11, 2019

Dear Friends and Colleagues,

I started this newsletter in 2015 when I was the UNLV School of Medicine's only employee. I believed then, as I do now, that it was a good way to introduce the community to issues and people important to the school. While keeping you up to date this summer on important developments, during this vacation season we are also going to use the newsletter to look back at some of the stories from the past that many people didn't get a chance to read, including the more than 1000 employees now on staff. This column from August 9, 2016 -- a year before our first students even began classes -- deals with opioids, which remain a serious national crisis in the U.S. In 2017, more than 47,000

Americans died as a result of opioid overdose and the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention estimates that the total economic burden of prescription opioid misuse alone in the U.S. is $78.5 billion a year, including the costs of healthcare, lost productivity, addiction treatment, and criminal justice involvement. I know you'll agree that we made the right decision to educate our students about prescribing medications that can be addictive.

TRAINING OUR MEDICAL STUDENTS TO FIGHT THE OPIOID EPIDEMIC

Opioids are pain-relieving drugs that work by interacting with opioid receptors in our cells. When they travel through blood and attach to opioid receptors in our brain cells, the cells release signals that muffle the perception of pain and boost feelings of pleasure.

Originally published August 9, 2016

A recent National Public Radio story by Natalie Jacewicz highlighted an issue the UNLV School of Medicine is determined to avoid: The need for medical schools to better educate students about opioid addiction. The story pointed out how little time medical schools spend teaching addiction medicine – sometimes just a single lecture during a student's first two years in school.

Meanwhile prescription drug use has reached epidemic proportions with 80 percent of the world's opioids and 99 percent of the world's hydrocodone consumed in the United States. The number of prescriptions written for opioids has quadrupled since 2000 – along with the number of deaths due to drug overdose.

Such startling statistics helped drive the development of our curriculum year-by-year to ensure UNLV School of Medicine students are prepared to help patients manage pain. Students need to understand the intricate balance between using medicine to keep patients comfortable during severe pain episodes and the risk of long-term misuse and addiction.

Background

Opioids, a class of drugs, are used to decrease the intensity of pain by blocking signals to the brain. As a prescription, this class includes codeine for mild pain and hydrocodone (Vicodin), oxycodone, (OxyContin, Percocet), and morphine, all of which are used to stop moderate to severe pain. Heroin is the street drug that falls into this class.

Pain is real. There are many times when opioids are needed to treat acute pain after surgery, dental work, fractures, etc., and to treat chronic pain due to a back injury, cancer, and other chronic disease states. Problems occur when these prescription drugs are not used as prescribed, when extra drugs are prescribed, and when pills are sold on the street.

When prescription drugs are used over long periods of time or incorrectly there can be serious side effects. These include addiction, which is physical dependency; tolerance, which is the need for increasing dosages to achieve the same effect, and increased sensitivity to pain.

"Our students will get much more than a few hours of lectures on pain management and addiction. We designed our four-year curriculum to ensure our students recognize addiction, prescribe the right amount of pain medication for their patients, and manage their patients' pain treatment."

Managing pain

My own personal experience with pain medication as a patient comes from when I had knee replacement surgery, one of the most painful of the musculoskeletal surgeries. I was wary about pain medication and tapered completely off the prescription as fast as I could. My surgeon helped me understand the importance of taking enough medicine for the painful physical therapy needed to restore full range of movement. He also pointed out that it was important to stop the pain medication if I ever found myself wanting to take a pill when I didn't have pain yet, but thought it might start soon. That was the signal to stop all together. His guidance worked for me.
Managing pain medication is even harder for individuals whose pain isn't associated with short-term healing. Chronic pain is the hardest to control.

UNLV School of Medicine pain medication curriculum

Unlike the medical student highlighted in the NPR story, our students will get much more than a few hours of lectures on pain management and addiction. We designed our four-year curriculum to ensure our students recognize addiction, prescribe the right amount of pain medication for their patients, and manage their patients' pain treatment.
Here is the UNLV School of Medicine's comprehensive plan for its four-year curriculum related to addiction.

Year 1

- Definition of acute and chronic pain
- Definition of addiction
- Public health aspects of chronic pain and addiction
- Taking a pain history
- Recognition and treatment of an overdose
- Basic pharmacology of opioids
- Opioid side effects and treatment
- Cancer pain
- End-of-life pain and treatment
- Musculoskeletal pain
- Facial pain and headache

- Visceral (internal organ) pain
- Addiction during pregnancy
- Medical complications of addiction

Year 2

- Pain pathways
- Infections associated with drug abuse
- Treatment of opioid addiction
- Role of physician in behavior change
- Role playing exercises in patient counseling

Year 3

- Prescription drug abuse
- Classification of pain
- Patient education about pain
- Opioid dosing strategies
- Shadowing of a pain patient
- Addiction in special populations like pregnancy, geriatric populations, and adolescents
- Non-substance addictions (gambling, sex, food, etc.)

Year 4

- Treatment of acute and post-op pain
- Transitions of care and referral to substance use disorder treatment centers
- Ethical issues in pain treatment
- Legal and regulatory issues in pain treatment

The UNLV School of Medicine is committed to addressing addiction in Las Vegas. It's one of the five social issues we're focusing on to improve health care in our region. In addition to our four-year curriculum, we're tackling the problem through community outreach, research, and special projects. We believe that our efforts will help turn those troubling statistics around and improve the pain management care our community receives.

Well, Mayor, I deleted my copy this morning! If anything, "Everyone is entitled to his/her opinion." Then perhaps your very important point. "Please remember, however, that this country was founded by immigrants."

Amazing my one-liner response justified this lengthy litany of his perspectives.
Two things (actually 3) since he's thinking himself king and thus is most judgmental:

1. "acknowledgement" should be acknowledgment
2. Hasn't he studied enough history to realize we (the historical "we") are all immigrants and probably most were church-mouse poor at one point?
3. who made him king?
4. Should we answer or not?

Mayor Goodman,
Thank you for your acknowledgement. Please read my summary of "Adios America" below.
Also, because some people are more influenced by feelings than facts, I thought you might be interested in my summary of this NYT book review, "Against Empathy: The Case for Rational Compassion" by Paul Bloom:
"Empathy, he argues, is a poor moral guide.... favouring the one over the many... empathy is untampered by reason, emanating from the murky bayou of the gut. He prefers a kind of rational compassion - a mixture of caring and detached cost-benefit analysis. ... To those who say empathy is essential to morality, he would reply that morality has many sources. Many 'wrongs' - like littering or cheating on your taxes - have no distinct victims to empathise with. Nor does it appear that the most empathetic people behave the most ethically. There have been hundreds of studies... the results are 'meh'. ... empathy is generally a bad tool to use for allocating resources. ... is part of the reason why governments and individuals care more about a little girl stuck in a well than about events that will affect millions. Consider parenting... almost all parents have a terrible time tolerating the discomfort of their children. Yet it's often essential (going to the dentist, doing homework, spending a night away from home). ...rationality in political domains often does seem to be in short supply."

"Adios, America!" by Ann Coulter. Excerpts below:

1. For forty years, the people have tried to tell politicians they want less immigration, but the politicians won't listen. Every single elite group in America is aligned against the public - the media, ethnic activists, big campaign donors, Wall Street, multimillionaire farmers, and liberal "churches." They all want mass immigration from the Third World to continue. Both political parties connive to grant illegal aliens citizenship and bring in millions more legally, and the media hide the evidence. ... How immigration is changing our country is a lot more important than most of the "news" we hear about endlessly. The media will pound away at Chris Christie's 'Bridge gate', apocryphal fraternity rapes, the Augusta National Golf Club's membership policies, 'white privilege... But getting the truth about immigration is nearly impossible. The media tell us: ... Immigrants are doing the jobs Americans just won't do: Americans are perfectly happy to do all manner of jobs - they just won't do them for $7.00 an hour. Unions used to care about that, but now they just want political power.... Amnesty will be Fantastic for the Economy: Unless we're talking about the Mexican economy, this is patently ridiculous. Adding another 30 million poor, unskilled, non-taxpaying, welfare-receiving people to America is good only for government workers and employers who refuse to mechanize their operations or pay Americans one dollar more. ... The problems stemming from unchecked immigration are all over the news. You'll just never be told they are problems of immigration - children living in poverty, childhood obesity, teen pregnancy, out-of-wedlock births, abysmal high school dropout rates, income inequality, 'homegrown' terrorists, massive Medicare frauds, internet crime, identity theft, prison overcrowding, the vast number of uninsured used to justify Obamacare, sex trafficking, the epidemic of child rape, the destruction of our national parks, drunk driving casualties, drug-resistant tuberculosis, measles and other viral outbreaks, bankrupt government pension, low reading and math scores and shorter 'Americans'. ... why is it a crisis that illegal aliens are 'living in the shadows'?... It's supposed to be uncomfortable to break the law. ... How did all those illegal aliens get into the shadows in the first place? They weren't kidnapped and dragged across the border... But 'living in the shadows' is evidently better than living in Guadalajara, otherwise, there's an easy solution. Democrats aren't big on amnestying other lawbreakers. they don't hysterically demand amnesty for accounting cheats or polluters - not even for "the children" of accounting cheats and polluters. Enron executives were hard workers. They loved their families and wanted the best for them, just I'm sure MS-13 gang members love their families.... When the bathtub is overflowing, the very first thing you do is: TURN OFF THE WATER. ... obviously, any amnesty functions as a magnet for more illegal aliens. Nothing shows the bad faith of amnesty advocates with more blinding clarity than their steadfast refusal to seal the border. Ordinary people see this and know they're being lied to. ... China built a thirteen-thousand mile wall several centuries before Christ, and it's still working. ... For whom is a 'world without borders' an ideal? People who don't much care for America, I gather. ... Congress has repeatedly voted to build a border fence. But somehow, the fence never gets built - and Congress does nothing. ... amnesty supporters tried a surprise argument: To stop illegals pouring across the border, congress had to pass amnesty. They were hoping to stun us into silence with the stupidity of their argument. ... The 1986 Simpson-Mazzoli Act was supposed to end illegal immigration forever: Give us amnesty one time, then: Never again. As with all laws that combine the bitter with the sweet, such as tax hikes and spending cuts, we got one and not the other. The amnesty came, but the border security never did. Illegal immigration sextupled. There have been a half dozen more amnesties since then... . "The moral thing to do" is usually defined as "following the law." ... To paraphrase what President Bush used to say about terrorists: The anti-amnesty side has to be perfect every time; the pro-amnesty side only has to win once. Then the country is finished. 2. ... shouldn't politicians be more concerned with what citizens think of them than what foreigners do? ... Wouldn't any sane immigration policy be based on the principle that we want to bring in only immigrants who will benefit the people already here? ... Try calling another country's embassy and asking to immigrate there. Consulate: What do you want? You: Well, I can't read or write, I have no skills, and I've got nine kids. Oh and by the way. If I can't make it in your country, would you mind cutting my family a check once a month? ... Our "family reunification" policies mean that being related to a recent immigrant from Pakistan trumps being a surgeon from Denmark. Our government does such a terrific job at choosing who gets to immigrate to America that 52 percent of legal immigrant households with children are on government assistance. In all, nearly 60 percent of immigrants - legal and illegal - are on government assistance, compared with 39 percent of native households. Why would any country voluntarily bring in people who have to be supported by the taxpayer? ... The immigrants get a taxpayer subsidy to work for the rich, and the rich get a break on the maid. This cozy deal is funded by the long-suffering middle class. The anti-American crowd used to dash off to fight with Communist insurgencies in Third World jungles. But the fun of being self-righteous was sometimes cut short when they ended up in prison.... Rather than hating America from abroad, today's radicals can hate it right here at home by bringing the Third World to America! ... Being openly hostile to America has become a part of ethnic pride. US Rep Luis Gutierrez calls on his own country (technically the USA) to "stop the deportation of our people . ... Gutierrez told Newsweek that he has "only one loyalty, and that's to the immigrant community."

Whose taxes will be raised to make up the shortfall? Not the people who don't pay any taxes at all. Employers don't care. They want the cheap labor NOW.... We're seeing exactly what Vladimir Lenin is supposed to have said about capitalists: 'They will sell us the rope with which to hang them.' ... Whey shouldn't employers be on the hook when their cheap labor becomes a public charge or commits a crime? ... An immigration law premised on the idea that America owes the rest of the world would be bad enough. But Third World immigration + massive welfare state + political correctness = The end of America. 4. America is not the natural state of the world. The natural state of the world is Darfur. The British Empire spread Anglo-Saxon culture around the globe - Protestant morals, individualism, and the rule of law. Most British colonies rejected those values. Only the ones populated by actual British people - America, Canada, Australia, and New Zealand - managed to hold on to them and, as a result, prospered. The empire's most successful experiment was the United States. Anyone who hesitates for a moment to recognize that some groups have it over other groups in producing free and prosperous nations has been brainwashed beyond reclamation.

5. America has already taken in more than one quarter of Mexico's entire population. ... Is that diverse enough yet? Why is it better that the ethnic population of our country be changed? ... Immigration of the past half century has been a homicide made to look like a suicide. ...a natural process? ... It's more like Americans are trying to stop an Army Corp of Engineers project that will flood the valley where they live in order to build a hydroelectric plant that will help one powerful corporation.

6. ... Until 1970, American immigrants did better than the natives - as any sane immigration policy would require. They made more money, bought more houses, and were more educated. By contrast, the post-1970 immigrants are far more likely to be unemployed and live in poverty that the native Americans. More that a third of the post-Kennedy act immigrants don't even have a high school diploma. ... In some bizarre notion of turn-about-is-fair-play, it is assumed that backward societies have the right to relocate to the countries of their former colonizers. I thought they hated those guys (the colonizers)? ... In just a few decades, Minnesota has gone from being approximately, 99 percent German, Dutch, Finnish, Danish, and Polish to 20 percent African immigrant, including at least one hundred thousand Somalis. And that's not counting the Somalis who have recently left the country to fight with al Queda and ISIS. One hundred thousand is just an estimate. We don't know precisely how many Somalis the federal government has brought in as "refugees" because the government won't tell us. ... Kate Towle, the parent leader of a high school group called "Students Together as Allies for Racial Trust" explained that diversity skills "have to be developed like math, history." Maybe it would be better for students to be learning math and history, rather than the important skill of getting along with Somalis. It doesn't seem to be working anyway. There are still violent ethnic brawls that send students to the hospital. What did we do to Somalis? ... absolutely nothing. But now these immigrants, who arrived yesterday, will get affirmative action over white Americans. ... Luckily, every Somali in Minnesota who has a job works for an ethnic grievance outfit - for example, the Somali Justice Advocacy Center, the Somali Resources Aid Associates, the African Development Center, and the Confederation of Somali Community in Minnesota. (And those are just some of the jobs being created by immigrants!). ... half of Somalis in Minnesota unemployed and 80 percent living at or below the poverty level... Recent mass murders committed by legal immigrants: The seven people murdered by Chechen immigrants Dzhokhar and Tamerlan Tsarnaev, who planted a bomb at the Boston Marathon, the four people fatally shot in a Carson City IHOP by... the Mexican-born Eduardo Sencion, the thirteen soldiers killed at Fort Hood by Major Nidal Malik Hasan, son of Palestinian immigrants, the thirteen people murdered by Vietnamese immigrant Jiverly Wong, at an American Civic Association in Binghamton, New York, the thirty-two people murdered at Virginia Tech by Seung-Hui Cho, a South Korean immigrant.... no one notices the immigrant crime wave because the media hide the evidence.

8. When did Americans get together and decide we want 30 percent of all immigrants to be from a single country and that country should be Mexico? If we're going to take almost all our immigrants from a single country, why not Denmark? There appears to have been only on Danish prisoner in New York State in decades - and, again, that was a Muslim. ...nearly 90 percent (of criminal aliens imprisoned in the states in 2009) were from one of eight countries: Mexico, Colombia, the Dominican Republic, Cuba, Jamaica, El Salvador, Honduras, and Guatemala. ... What other country on earth would be so stupid? We have studies showing Hispanics are underrepresented in Hollywood, at top colleges, in the federal government, and in the national media... You know where else Hispanics are underrepresented? In the US military. You'd never know it... but Hispanics are half as likely to enlist in the military as either whites or blacks. ... Hispanic males in the US are more than three times as likely to spend time in prison in their lifetimes than white males. ... The vast majority of all drugs in America - heroin, cocaine, marijuana, and increasingly, methamphetamine - are brought in from Mexico. Most of the heroin sold in the US is grown south of the border, and Mexican cartels transport nearly all of it. ... More than 40,000 Americans were killed from all illegal drug use in 2010, surpassing car accidents and shootings as a cause of death. ... Today, China is once again battling drug smuggling because like America, it also has a poor, corrupt nation with a massive humanitarian crisis on its border; Not Mexico, but North Korea. Guess what China did? It built a fence! Despite stern warnings from the New York Times, China put a thirteen-foot barbed wire fence on its border, patrolled by armed guards. And you know what, it's working! ... Is an American citizen more likely to be murdered by a Muslim terrorist or by a Mexican? According to CNN, 29 Americans have been killed in Islamic terrorist attacks in the US since 9/11. I don't know why they excluded 9/11, so by my count, it's 3,029. In fact, let's round it up to 4,000 to cover the last several decades. According to the GAO's extremely conservative figures, Mexicans alone - forget other immigrants - have murdered a minimum of 23,000 Americans in the last few decades. ... If this were happening in Israel, forget a fence - Netanyahu would be bombing Mexico. ... President Eisenhower put a general in charge of the INS, who proceeded to round up and deport illegals in an operation dubbed "Operation Wetback." HBO's Bill Maher would be saying of our southern neighbors: "Americans have 349 Nobel Prizes; Latin Americans have 16. That seems like kind of a big advantage for Team America." ... Far more Americans are murdered by Mexicans, per capita, than Israelis are murdered by Palestinians. 11. The three young girls kidnapped and held as sex slaves for more than a decade in a boarded-up house in Cleveland had been held by Ariel Castro. ... But then it turned out Castro wasn't the only Hispanic raping young girls - on his block. ... While investigating the Castro case, detectives happened upon Acevedo... he had raped and killed two of his neighbors...

Chandra Levy's killer turned out not to be Democratic Congressman Gary Condit, but Ingmar Guandique - an illegal alien from El Salvador, given temporary amnesty by President Bush. (Does that guy have any brothers? I'd love to see another one like him in the White House!). The one Central Park rapist that even liberals admit was guilty was Hispanic Matias Reyes. After the other attackers had finished with the victim, Reyes came across the joggers beaten and bloody body, and raped her himself.

12. ... environmentalists used to care about gridlock, overcrowding, loss of parkland, and exhaustion of natural resources. Not anymore. Today's environmentalists turn a blind eye as 25 million people tramp through delicate ecosystems, set fire to national parks, kill livestock, dump tons of soiled diapers and Pepsi bottles in the desert, and deface ancient Native American sites. Political correctness demands that no one notice immigrants' toll on the environment. ... Of the 77 human-caused fires on federal or tribal land in Arizona between 2006 and 2010 investigated by the GAO, a cause could be determined in 60 cases. Fully half of those were caused by illegal aliens. ...One of the reasons the GAO was able to review only 77 fires was that the BLM and the Forest Service couldn't spare any agents for investigations. They were too busy protecting 'firefighters and their equipment from illegal aliens.' Apparently, when illegals see border patrol agents, they try to distract them by throwing lighted matches in the brush to start fires. Not only do illegal immigrants intentionally set wildfires, but they violently attack firefighters trying to extinguish the blazes. Firies are allowed to rage, because fire crews are forced to wait for law enforcement protection. ... The Forest Service had once gamely suggested trying to identify 'the group most likely to start fires,' but once the evidence was in, they buried it. To blame illegal aliens would be playing the 'blame the perpetrator' game. ... Because of new border restrictions after 9/11 - I guess it was possible to tighten the borders! - our dear friends in Mexico moved their drug cartel operations directly into America's parks. ... 'These guys shoot people'... Armed illegal aliens were in control of our national parks, so government officials leapt to action by shutting down the parks. A majority of Organ Pipe Cactus National Monument was closed to US citizens for more than a decade because it was too dangerous.

... For a glimpse into America's future, consider how Mexicans treat their own environment. In Mexico's most famous national park, a ten-thousand-year-old evergreen forest designated by presidential decree as a biosphere reserve, illegal loggers chop down about seventy mature tress a day... While environmentalists from around the world send millions of dollars to Mexico preserve the forest... For decades, Mexican refuse ended up on San Diego's world-famous beaches by way of the Tijuana River. ... One solution would have been for Mexicans to stop throwing their garbage in the river. ... Instead, US taxpayers funded a sewage treatment plant on the border at a cost of $239.4 million. Mexico chipped in $17 million. ... Where are the environmentalists? For 50 years, they've been carrying on about overpopulation; promoting family planning, birth control... The Sierra Club began sounding the alarm over the country's expanding population in 1965 - the very year Teddy Kennedy's immigration act passed - and in 1978, adopted a resolution expressly asking Congress to 'conduct a thorough examination of US immigration laws.' For a while, the Club taked about almost nothing else. "It is obvious" the Club said two years later, "that the numbers of immigrants the US accepts affects our population size and growth rate," even more than 'the number of children per family.

Over the next three decades, America took in tens of millions of legal immigrants and illegal aliens alike. But suddenly, about ten years ago, the Sierra Cub realized to its embarrassment that importing multiple millions of polluting, fire-setting, littering immigrants is actually fantastic for the environment! The advantages of overpopulation dawned on the Sierra Club right after it received a $100 million donation from hedge fund billionaire David Gelbaum with the express stipulation that - as he told the LA Times - 'if they ever came out anti-immigration, they would never get a dollar from me.' It would be as if someone offered the Catholic Church $100 million to be pro-abortion. But the Sierra Club said: Sure! Did you bring the check? Obviously, there's no reason to listen to them on anything.

... Not only did the Sierra Club never again say another word against immigration, but, in 2004, it went the extra mile, denouncing three actuals environmentalists running for the Club's board, by claiming they were racists who opposed mass immigration. The three 'white supremacists' were Dick Lamm, the three-time Democratic governor of Colorado; Frank Morris, former head of the Black Congressional Caucus Foundation; and Cornell professor David Pimentel, who created the first ecology course at the university... America's premiere hate group, the Southern Poverty Law Center, jumped into the fray, with multimillionaire con man and SPLC head Morris Dees running for the Sierra Club board simply to smear the three real environmentalist candidates... But, evidently, what poor Southerners need most is a massive influx of foreign poor people competing for their jobs. ... In 2012, Sierra Club executive director Michael Brune announced that the Club officially supported mass immigration - amnesty, no borders, more legal immigration, the whole nine yards.

13. Normally, (Carlos) slim is the kind of businessman the (NY) Times - along with every other sentient human being - would find repugnant. Frequently listed as the richest man in the world, Slim acquired his fortune through a corrupt inside deal giving him a monopoly on telecommunications services in Mexico. But in order to make money from his monopoly, Slim needs lots of Mexicans living in the US, sending money to their relatives back in Oaxaca. Otherwise, Mexicans couldn't pay him - and they wouldn't have much need for phone service, either, other than to call in ransom demands. Back in 2004, before the Times became Slim's pimp - a Times article stated: "Clearly... the nation's southern border is under siege." But that was before Carlos Slim saved the Times from bankruptcy. Ten years later, with a border crisis even worse that in 2004, and Latin America pouring across the border, the Times indignantly demanded the Obama "go big" on immigration and give "millions of immigrants permission to stay". ...

Republicans are terrified of saying anything about immigration for fear of being called 'racist.' ... The fact that most immigrants are Hispanic provides excellent cover for the elite's monumental self-interest. Here's a tip for the GOP: Don't talk about the illegal aliens. Talk about Carlos Slim, Talk about rich Americans finding a solution to 'the servant problem.' Talk about one-hit wonder Mark Zuckerberg underpaying his computer programmers while 32 percent of American graduates in STEM fields can't get job and the rest haven't seen their salaries rise for more than a decade. Talk about how Bill Clinton couldn't find someone to be his attorney general because of the prevalence of illegal alien employees in households of the '1 percent'. Determined to appoint a woman attorney general, Clinton kept producing women with illegal alien nannies (Zoe Baird, Kimba Wood). ... The elites just can't grasp that most Americans raise their own kids, make their own beds, cook their own food, and drive their own cars. ... America will be Brazil, with a well-pampered, itty-bitty upper class, amid an ocean of poor people. ... It's a sweet deal the elites have: They get to have cheap nannies and lawn boys in the whitest towns in America - and feel morally superior at the same time!

14. The vast majority of all legal immigrants - two thirds- get in on "family reunification" policies each year. In other words, America has no say about the single largest category of immigrants... Entire villages from Pakistan are dumped on the country, based not on their expertise in nuclear engineering, but because everyone in the village is related to the first guy who got in. If they're not, in the strict sense, related, they'll lie. In 2008, the State Department suspended the family reunification part of the African refugee program because DNA testing showed that only 20 percent of 'family members' were actually related. We'll still take as many refugees from Africa, but they won't have to lie about being related anymore. ... The special agricultural amnesty of 1986 is a good example of how even the most reasonable-sounding immigration law will inevitably be turned into a pipeline for criminals, welfare cases, and terrorists. ... illegal alien farmworkers who could prove they had done seasonal farmwork for a total of ninety days between May 1, 1985 and May 1, 1986, would be granted temporary legal status. what could go wrong? In the first three years of the program, 888,637 agricultural amnesty applications were identified as fraudulent - but only 60,637 of those were denied. Overwhelmed with amnesty applications under just this one provision, the INS found it to be a big time-saver to simply ignore fraud. ... Mohammed Salameh, another terrorist convicted in the 1993 World Trade Center bombing, was also in the US because of Schumer's special agricultural worker amnesty. The unskilled 19-year-old first came to the US on a tourist visa because, as the US consulate later explained, someone in the office "took a chance" on Mohammed. Mohammed not only had never worked on a farm, but he was not even in the country until 1988, two years after the special amnesty became law, though it was explicitly limited to those who had worked on farms in the US in the year before May 1, 1986. By the most basic definition of the law, Mohammed was not eligible, but he was allowed to stay in the US and obtain a work visa - while the INS processed his petition. Moving with the lightning speed of a government agency, the INS rejected his petition for amnesty as a farm worker three years later. Then, Mohammed applied for a general amnesty, claiming he had been living continuously in the US from 1980 to 1986. Actually, he was a teenager in Jordan then, but again, Mohammed was allowed to stay while the INS considered his request. As it considering, Mohammed bombed the World Trade Center.

How about all those brainy, high-tech H-!B immigrants that Senator Orrin Hatch keeps telling us about? ... the cheap-labor advocacy group Partnership for a New American Economy excitedly tweeted that two - yes two - of the five LindedIn founders were "born in Europe"!... Here's my counter tweet: 98.7% fo the founders of important Silicon Valley companies were born in America! 99 percent are white men! ... Professor Norman Matloff: 'The vast majority of H-1B's, including those hired from US universities, are ordinary people doing ordinary work, not the best and the brightest. On the contrary, the average quality of the H-1Bs is lower that theat of the Americans. ... The main advantage of foreign labor over native workers, Matloff explains, is aht H-1B workers are indentured servants: They can't quit without risking deportation. so American employers get to pay less for standard computer programming work. ... They want cheap people. Mass-immigration advocates push ethnic stereotypes about high-IQ immigrants, but then go crazy whenever anyone suggests we actually bring in high-IQ immigrants. ... The average Indian IQ is staggeringly low: 82. That's about the same as the average IQ in Afghanistan - 84; Panama - 84; Dominican Republic - 82; Paraguay - 84; Yemen - 85; and Tonga - 86. We take more immigrants from India than from Austria, Belgium, Denmark, Finland, Greece, Iceland, Ireland, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Sweden, Switzerland, Spain, and the Czech Republic put together. Why are we discriminating...? The answer is: Because those immigrants would tend to fill the kinds of jobs rich people have.

15. The only thing that stands between America and oblivion is a total immigration moratorium. ... It's evident that the government can't be trusted to use three brain cells in admitting immigrants, so its discretion has to be completely revoked. No matter how clearly laws are written, government bureaucrats connive to confer citizenship on people that a majority of Americans would not want to let in as tourists, much less as our fellow citizens. ... No other fix will work. Congress could just insist that immigrants pay taxes, learn English, not collect welfare, and have good moral character, except the problem is: It already has. All those laws were swept away by INS officials, judges, and Democratic administrations. Doing it again won't produce a different result. ... Even if we could trust the government on immigration - and we can't - there are the legions of immigration lawyers, lobbyists, nonprofits, and general miscreants whose single-minded mission is to turn America into the Third World hellhole of liberal fantasies. ... The billion-dollar immigration industry has turned every single aspect of immigration law into an engine of fraud. The family reunifications are frauds, the 'farmworkers' are frauds, the high-tech visas are frauds - and the asylum and refugee cases are monumental frauds. ... the only result of our asylum policies is that we get good liars. Taxpayers subsidize sleazy immigration activists who coach immigrants to lie to immigration officials. Document mills produce phony passports, school records, and medical reports. ... immigration judges approve 92 percent of all "credible fear" asylum applications.

16. ... if Romney had won 71 percent of the Hispanic vote in 2012, instead of 27 percent, he still would have lost. On the other hand, had he won just 4 percent more of the white vote, he would have won.

17. America's suicidal immigration policies are the single biggest threat facing the nation. What happens with immigration will determine whether America continues to exist or becomes a Third World republic...

Mayor Goodman,
I was disappointed to watch you on your KCLV show Friday evening supporting illegal aliens. Worse yet was the inclusion of two guests, both of who were also advocates of illegal aliens. Wouldn't it have been fair to host an equal amount of speakers in opposition? Is the care and feeding of illegal aliens a part of the city charter? I doubt it. We need the illegal immigrants to return to their native countries. Your positions lure more of them here and encourage them to stay. Why don't you start looking out for US citizens first? Don't you realize that the reason people from third world countries sneak into the US is ultimately because they can't stand being around other third world people. Plenty of skilled people from developed countries are waiting patiently for admission to the US. Is it fair to reward those whose very first act into this county is illegal? You can disguise the problem by saying they are fleeing high crime rates, violence, rotten economy... but this deception hides the real reason. Why would you want to turn us into a third world country? If you feel so concerned about them, there is an easy solution: move to a third world country to help them where they are.

Please read:

The Immigration Solution, by MacDonald, Hansen & Malanga

While the cheapness of the immigrants' labor may benefit a very few industries and provide some upper and le-class families with cut-rate gardeners and nannies, it adds very little to our national standard of living. On the other side of the ledger, the costs these immigrants impose on US taxpayers for health care, schooling, welfare, and (all too often) incarceration far outweigh the benefits they offer. In California, the National Academy of Sciences found immigrant families cost each native-born household an additional $1,200 in taxes per year. Although a net loss for the US, such workers are an unalloyed boon for Mexico. Their ability to find work north of the border is an essential safety valve for Mexico's failed economy and stubbornly unreformed political culture, and the remittances these workers send home are indispensable to Mexico, constituting its second largest source of hard currency. No wonder the Mexican government – especially through its consuls in the US – vigorously fosters the illegal migration of its nationals into its northern neighbor. … But those earlier huddled masses of immigrants yearning to breathe free, however tired and poor they may have looked, were in fact on average more skilled than the native-born population of a century ago. In addition, the less-developed economy of that era also had a vastly greater need for immigrants without skills than does today's knowledge economy. More important, the US immigration system of that period was a machine for selecting the most enterprising and energetic migrants. With no welfare system whatever, those who came were those who thought they could make use of the opportunity and freedom America offered by their own efforts. Grateful for the chance, these newcomers were only too glad to assimilate to their new land as best they could, and their children did so wholeheartedly. Not so today. The first child born in America to an immigrant entitles his or her family to child-only welfare payments – a hefty-looking sum to a recent migrants from a peasant village. … Deprived of work, illegals would return home, just as 60 percent of immigrants from the first great migration eventually left these shores when they couldn't make it here. ...our new policy should select newcomers not because they are someone's brother or adult child or elderly parents, or because they successfully sneaked into the country some years ago, but because they have some special skill... that will enrich our nation. … Thousands arrive illegally from Mexico into California each year... They come in such numbers because a tacit alliance of Right and Left has created an open-borders policy, aimed at keeping wage labor cheap and social problems ever fresh, so that the ministrations of Chicano studies professors, La Raza activists, and all the other self-appointed defenders of group causes will never be unneeded. … nearly one quarter of California's inmates are aliens from Mexico. The pro-labor left found that the industrious new arrivals whom it championed eroded the wages of its own domestic low wage constituencies - the Labor Department attributes 50 percent of real-wage declines to the influx of cheap immigrant labor. … when I was ten, in 1963, all suburbanites mowed their own lawns – many with push mowers. Now almost everyone hires the job out. Nannies for toddlers and grannies, unheard of then, are now ubiquitous... Rural schools used to begin in mid-September to ensure that we natives could pick grapes to earn our school clothes and shoes. Today not a single student in California would do such hot, dirty work, now considered demeaning. … So we allow illegal aliens to obtain California driver's licenses – the foundation for all other means of legal identification – and to pay reduced in-state tuition at the University of California, thereby providing several thousand dollars in discounts not available to American citizens from out of state. Whether you break the law to reach California or immigrate legally, it makes little difference in how you drive, send your kids to college, or draw on the public services of the state. … I often suggest to teachers who tell aliens that our culture is racist, exploitative, and sexist that they should live in Mexico themselves to fathom why millions are dying to obtain what they so casually dismiss.

… America does not have a vast labor shortage that requires waves of low wage immigrants to alleviate; in fact, unemployment among native-born unskilled workers in high – consistently about double the nations' overall unemployment rate. … an unusual coalition of business groups, unions, civil rights activists, and church leaders thwarted the call for restrictions with passage of the inaptly names 1986 Immigration Reform and Control Act, which legalized some 2.7 million unauthorized aliens already here, supposedly in exchange for tougher penalties and controls against employers who hired illegals. The law proved no deterrent, however, because supporters, in subsequent legislation and court cases argued on civil rights grounds, weakened the employer sanctions. Meanwhile more illegals flooded here in the hope of future amnesties from Congress, while the newly legalized sneaked their wives and children into the country rather than have them wait for family-preference visas. The flow of illegals into the country rose to between 300,000 and 500,000 per year in the 1990's, so that a decade after the legislation that had supposedly solved the undocumented alien problem by reclassifying them as legal, the number of illegals living in the US was back up to about 5 million. … In many American industries, waves of low-wage workers have also retarded investments that might lead to modernization and efficiency. Farming, which employs a million immigrant laborers in California alone, is the prime case in point. Faced with a labor shortage in the early 1960's, when President Kennedy ended a 22-year-old guest-worker program that allowed 45,000 Mexican farm hands to cross over the border and harvest 2.2 million tons of California tomatoes for processed foods, farmers complained but swiftly automated, adopting a mechanical tomato-picking technology created more than a decade earlier. Today, just 5,000 better-paid workers – one-ninth the original workforce – harvest 12 million tons of tomatoes using the machines. The savings prompted by low-wage migrants may even be minimal in crops not easily mechanized. … If the benefits of the current generation of migrants are small, the costs are large and growing because of America's vast range of social programs and the wide advocacy network that strives to hook low-earning legal and illegal immigrants into these programs. A 1998 Nationals Academy of Sciences study found that more than 30 percent of California's foreign-born were on Medicaid... compared with 14 percent of native –born households. The foreign-born were more than twice as likely as the native-born to be on welfare, and their children were nearly five times as likely to be in means-tested government lunch programs. Native-born households pay for much of this, the study found, because they earn more and pay higher taxes – and are more likely to comply with tax laws. Recent immigrants, by comparison, have much lower levels of income and tax compliance.

... This call for 'human rights' is a clever one, for it hides its radical status in a rhetorical safe harbor. What, exactly, are the 'human rights' that the US is denying illegal aliens? They have unfettered access to free medical care, free education, welfare for their children, free representation in court when they commit crimes, every due process protection during criminal prosecution that the Constitution guarantees citizens and legal immigrants, the shelter of labor laws, and the miracles of modern industrial society like clean water, the control of infectious diseases (including the ones they bring with them), and plumbing. The only putative 'right' they lack - and that, of course, is the 'human right' to which they and their ambassadors refer - is the right to legal status regardless of illegal entry. ....

No one will take the assurance that 'this time we mean business' seriously. If the executive branch is not willing to enforce the current law against violators, a new set of laws will not suddenly strengthen its resolve... border defenses have been fortified over the years, but the drill has been: if you can get past the border patrol, you are home free. The most important action the government could take to end illegal immigration would be to penalize employers that unlawfully hire illegal aliens... After 9/11, the department of Homeland Security deported fifteen hundred illegal Pakistanis. An additional fifteen thousand then left voluntarily, reports Jessica Vaughan of the Center for Immigration Studies. There is no reason to think this enforcement-through-attrition strategy won't work as well for Hispanic illegals. ...

It would be useful for open-borders optimists to spend some time in the Los Angeles Unified School District, which is 73 percent Hispanic, and where just 40 percent of Hispanic students graduate. (Nationwide, 53 percent of Hispanics graduate from high school...) Of those Hispanic students who do graduate, just 22 percent have completed the course work necessary for admission to a four-year state college - which means that of all Hispanic students who enter in ninth grade, fewer than 15 percent will graduate ready for college. Immigrant advocates have fiercely opposed in court a long-deferred California high school exit exam, which would require students to answer just over 50 percent of questions testing eight-grade-level math and ninth-grade-level English. The California Research Bureau predicts that if the exam becomes a reality, Hispanic graduation rates would drop well below 30 percent. ... Schools spend huge sums trying to improve the Hispanic graduation rate, even hiring 'outreach consultants' for dropout prevention. One Santa Ana consultant's approach is predictably multicultural. "We need to teach teachers that students need to be proud of where they are coming from," she told me. But, of course, Hispanic school failure derives not from ethnic neglect - the Sana Ana schools glorify the Hispanic heritage to a fault...
...a high level of immigration translates to increased levels of crime. Between the foreign-born generation and their American children, the incarceration rate of Mexican American jumps more than eightfold...
Pro-amnesty forces promote that illegal immigrants "risk everything for the dream of freedom"... However lousy the Mexican economy, there are few, if any, political freedoms enjoyed by Americans that Mexico denies. It is the Yankee dollar, not untasted freedom, that brings the vast majority of illegals here.

...in spring 2006 American witnessed millions of illegal aliens who not only were unapologetic about their illegal status but were demanding that their hosts accommodate their own political grievances, from providing driver's licenses to full amnesty. The largest demonstrations - held on May Day, with thousands of protesters waving Mexican flags and bearing placards depicting the Communist insurrectionist Che Guevara - only confirmed to most Americans that illegal immigration was out of control and beginning to become politicized along the lines of Latin American radicalism. I chronicled in Mexifornia the anomaly of angry protesters waving he flag of the country they vehemently did not wish to return to , but now the evening news beamed these images to millions. In short, the radical socialism of Latin America, seething in the angry millions who flocked to support Venezuela's Hugo Chavez, Bolivia's Evo Morales, and Mexico's Andres Lopez Obrador, had now seemingly been imported into our own largest cities. ...

Crippled America

We are the only nation in the world whose immigration system places the needs of other nations ahead of our own. …

Too many people have forgotten the Mariel boatlift. … The Mexican government has published pamphlets explaining how to illegally emigrate to the US. … It's a great way for those governments to get rid of their worst people without paying any price.... Operation Wetback... was successful. It was a joint effort between the INS and the Mexican government. Special immigration teams were created to quickly process and deport illegal immigrants. One of the reasons it worked is that people who were caught were given to Mexican government agents, who moved them into central Mexico, where they could find jobs. ...In the first year, more than one million people were sent back. ...Why should we absorb the expense of keeping criminals in prisons? Let their countries of origin deal with the problems they sent us. If they refuse to take them back, we can stop issuing visas to those countries, preventing their citizens from legally visiting the US. I also would triple the number of immigration officers we currently employ until the wall is built. … Currently there are about 5,000 officers attempting to enforce the existing immigration laws against the more than 11 million illegal aliens. Compare that to the... 35,000 officers in the New York Police Department. Since 9/11 we have tripled the size of the border patrol but haven't substantially increased the number of ICE officers – the officers who enforce immigration laws. … We have to cut off federal grants to sanctury cities... We need to have real penalties for people who overstay their visas. … Most important is ending or curtailing so-called birthright citizenship, or anchor babies. … It is estimated that about 300,000 of these children are born here annually. That's 300,000 children who are entitled to all the rights and privileges granted to American citizens because their mothers entered this country illegally... There are businesses that specialize in making this happen! They call it 'birth tourism'…. And those people take advantage of the system and come here illegally should never enjoy the benefits of being a resident – or citizen – of this nation. So, I am against any path to citizenship for undocumented workers or anyone else who is in this country illegally. They should – and need to – go home and get in line. And you know who agrees with me? The Mexicans, the Chinese, and all the people from other countries who want to be here legally and can't get a visa or fit into a quota... We can be generous and do all of this humanely. But the security and prosperity of American citizens have to come first. .. (Chapter 3)

I believe in putting the needs of American citizens first, always.... There's an old phrase that, sadly, you rarely hear anymore, "Made in America". We will start saying this again. (Chap. 10)

Justice Delayed: Terrorism Victims Fight For Redress

The suicide bombings at a Jerusalem mall by Hamas militants left Gregg Salzman with permanent nerve damage, a perforated eardrum and burns across his body. The New Jersey chiropractor still suffers constant pain and debilitating headaches, 19 years after the terrorist attack. But the physical injuries were only the start of his troubles.

Salzman counts himself among a growing number of terrorism victims who, in their fight for compensation, find themselves caught in the middle of a power struggle that starts with government players jostling for control and ends pitting victim against victim in courtrooms and administrative offices across the US.

EXPERT ANALYSIS

Paris Climate Accord Implementation: United States

There is evidence that the U.S., whether via federal regulation, state action or industry efforts, is on a path to address many of the same issues that the Paris agreement seeks to affect. It is hard to imagine, however, a long-term commitment to climate change without significant congressional support, say attorneys with Shearman & Sterling LLP.

In Congress: FAA, Navy, And A New Education Secretary

It will be a busy week on Capitol Hill. Before turning to a host of other matters, the Senate is expected to vote on the nomination of Dr. John B. King Jr. to serve as Secretary of Education. Meanwhile, the House has votes scheduled on 14 items under suspension of the rules, including 10 bills from the Energy and Commerce Committee and two resolutions from the Foreign Affairs Committee, as well as short-term extension of FAA authority, say Richard Hertling and Kaitlyn McClure of Covington & Burling LLP.

Profession

During a tense discussion in a deposition of a woman accusing JPMorgan Chase Bank NA of improperly seizing her home, the plaintiff's attorney stopped to duck her head under the conference room table. "I asked her what she was doing," said JPMorgan's lawyer, Brian Rich, according to the deposition transcript. "She indicated that she was looking to see if there was anything between my legs." Rude, combative and unprofessional conduct like this is a growing problem among attorneys and has inspired a movement by many states to reaffirm the importance of civility in the law. Some say, however, that these efforts may not make much headway in an industry increasingly driven by the bottom line and getting clients favorable results at all costs.

As EPA Sets 2017 Renewable Fuel Volumes, Future Is Unclear

The Environmental Protection Agency has released its final 2017 volumes under the Renewable Fuel Standard, a program established by Congress to spur development and use of biofuels in the U.S. transportation sector. But the 2017 numbers may face legal challenges — and the entire RFS program could be restructured by the Trump EPA or the new Congress, says James Rubin of Dorsey & Whitney LLP.

The FTC's Overreaching Regulation Of Homeopathic Drugs

Recently, the U.S. Federal Trade Commission decided once again to force itself into the U.S. Food and Drug Administration's ill-fitting shoes, establishing safety and effectiveness standards for over-the-counter homeopathic drugs. The FTC is only obfuscating the already-strained regulatory framework for homeopathic drugs, say attorneys from Venable LLP.

Philip Hirschkop: Quietly Making Noise For 50 Years

The first paragraph of Philip Hirschkop's obituary is going to contain the word "Loving." That's undeniable. But many of Hirschkop's other cases are just as groundbreaking in their own right. They aren't household names like Loving, but they have affected millions in the nation's households, says Randy Maniloff of White and Williams LLP.

Max Immelmann

World War I Flying Ace
Max Immelmann PLM was the first German World War I flying ace. He was a pioneer in fighter aviation and is often mistakenly credited with the first aerial victory using a synchronized gun. He was the first aviator to win the Pour le Mérite, and was awarded it at the same time as Oswald Boelcke. His name has become attached to a common flying tactic, the Immelmann turn, and remains a byword in aviation. He is credited with 15 aerial victories.

Now getting back to supervisor Lynne Immel at Tyson Foods in Clarksvville, Johnson County, Arkansas and a brief introduction to my supervisor and in casual conversation, Lynne told me she worked for a Tyson Food plant in Michigan and lived in Michigan. She met a man there that she fell in fell in love with. He transferred from Michigan many years ago from that plant to Clarksville, Johnson county, AR Tyson Foods. She followed him and transferred to the Tyson Food plant in Clarksville after he did. They then got married and are still married.

Leading us possibly to Red Social Nationalist Nazi Demjanjuk. Didn't he immigrate to the United States to the Michigan, Indiana and Ohio areas? He was a retired auto plant worker. Lynne Immel and her husband are from Michigan. (In the picture below of a young Demjanjuk (4th picture to your right) is a very strong familial resemblance to a recently hired young woman by the name of Ashley who was hired June 3rd and in my orientation group at Tyson Foods, Clarksville, Johnson County, AR. Ashley has an older sister who works at Tyson Foods too. Ashley's older sister is a large intimidating bull dyke lesbian type.)

Could this be the tie to gang automobiles traveling on the I-540 N freeway and previous reporting of cars with personalized license plates Tay Tay (I recognized this nickname of a gang member whom I recognized and worked with at the Manheim Auto auction center in Las Vegas, Clark County, NV) and another car with the personalized license plate "Buchy" on the same day. I wasn't sure if Buchy was the nickname of surname Buchignani or stood for Butchy.

John Demjanjuk

John Demjanjuk was a retired Ukrainian-American auto worker, a former soldier in the Soviet Red Army, and a POW during the Second World War.

- Wikipedia

"Demjanjuk, his wife and their child arrived in New York City aboard the USS General W. G. Haan on 9 February 1952.[28][31] On 14 November 1958, Demjanjuk became a naturalized citizen of the United States. He and his wife, whom he met in a displaced persons' camp, moved to Indiana with their daughter and then to the Cleveland suburb of Seven Hills. He became a United Auto Workers (UAW) diesel engine mechanic at the nearby Ford automobile factory[32] where a friend from back in Regensburg, Germany, had found work.[31] Demjanjuk and his wife, who began work at a General Electric facility,[31] later had two more children.

In 1975, Michael Hanusiak, an editor of Ukrainian News, presented a list of ethnic Ukrainians living in the United States suspected of collaborating with Germans in World War II to what was then the US Immigration and Naturalization Service; Demjanjuk's name was on that list.[33] Soviet newspapers and archives had provided the names during Hanusiak's visit to the Soviet Union in 1974.[34] Hanusiak also handed over a purported copy of a Nazi ID card issued to Demjanjuk at Trawniki.[35]

In August 1977, the Justice Department submitted a request to the United States District Court for the Northern District of Ohio that Demjanjuk's citizenship be revoked on the basis that he had allegedly concealed his involvement with Nazi death camps on his immigration application in 1951. The request followed a lengthy investigation by the INS after Demjanjuk was identified by five Holocaust survivors on a photo spread used in the investigation of Feodor Fedorenko, a Treblinka concentration camp guard. Fedorenko was later extradited to the USSR on his admission that he was such a guard and that he lied on his US immigration applications." - ref. John Demjanjuk wikipedia.

I also recognized a girl who speaks an Asian dialect of sorts or possibly Filippino at Tyson Foods. She looked very familiar to me but I couldn't place where I had seen her before until yesterday (June 20, 2019) at work when I saw her without her hairnet and glasses.

This woman had an uncanny resemblance to a girl I worked with at the Walmart Store in Cornelius, Washington County, Oregon. Her name was Nova and she ran around with and was involved with another Cornelius Walmart store employee by the name of Crystal and Crystal's daughter Savannah whom Crystal solicited out for sex and for money.

Going underground and possibly identifying this satanic coven of witches, human/sex trafficking and drug trafficking for the sole purpose of initiating the agenda of red national socialism.

Subject: Recognize two co-workers at the Wal-Mart Store #4221 in Cornelius, Washington County, Oregon to incident many years ago at the Social Security Office in Ukiah, Mendocino County, California.

August 14, 20ll

I just relocated to Walmart Store #4221 in Cornelius, Washington County, Oregon as of July 16, 2011 from Walmart Store #2552, Eastport Plaza, Portland, Oregon. One co-worker at the Fitting Room named Cindy harrassed me right away and was very demeaning in her speaking to me. She gave me a certain scowling evil look, very inappropriate for the work place in reprimanding me right away as she loitered around the Fitting Room because she had tendonitis or some ailment and was not able to perform her usual duties at work. I knew I recognized her from somewhere and it finally came to me yesterday where I had seen her before. Many years ago approximately 2003 -2004 I went to the Social Security Office in Ukiah, Mendocino County, California and arrived there just before it closed. It was very strange. The doors were locked before closing time by a security guard and myself and this girl (It was Cindy who had a toddler in her arms (description of toddler- very fair skin, blonde hair, blue eyes - chubby only in a diaper) and was standing in line in front of me. When she and the baby approached the counter, the clerk was there to do paperwork to get the baby a social security number. I thought this was odd because infants are given social security numbers now at the hospital at birth. This woman who was in line ahead of me at the Social Security Office (it was Cindy a co-worker whom I just remet at Wal-Mart Store #4221 in Cornelius) gave me that same evil satanic fixed glare while she had the infant in her arms. I'll never forget that look or what she looks like because it made me sick to think that baby was kidnapped or was not her child and the look on that woman's face.

Co-Worker, Crystal, who works at the Fitting Room at Wal-Mart Store #4221 in Cornelius looks very familiar to me also and I know I've known her from before or met her in the Ukiah area of Mendocino County, California. She is also very watchful of me, attaching herself to me and has no boundaries in doing her work with other co-workers. She's a very two faced individual.

Another co-worker at the Fitting Room who is antagonistic and not a good worker at all is Tawna at Wal-Mart Store #4221 in Cornelius, Washington County, Oregon. She doesn't look familiar to me from the Ukiah, Mendocino County, California area but she is in the same clique as Crystal and Cindy. She is very domineering and sabotages co-worker's work to make them mad.

Subject: Tips regarding the possible whereabouts of Kyron Horman - Highway 26W Cornelius, Forest Grove, North Plains distance and area observed before taking Glencoe exit. To the left is a billboard type sign of Kyron Horman missing. The Cornelius Pass Road , Jackson School Road exit areas to Glencoe Road exit area on Highway 26W.

While driving to work (Cornelius Walmart #4221) yesterday, December 12/19/11, taking the route of Highway 26W and the Glencoe exit just past the North Plains area at approximately 1:30 - 2:00 pm, I noticed a missing person's poster or billboard type sign in this area of the freeway or highway on a rural property building. I am from Santa Rosa, Sonoma County, California and as I was driving in this area of Washington County, Oregon, it became very familiar to me as much resembling the area of Sonoma County, California on the 101 Freeway entering the town of Cloverdale, Sonoma County, California to the left of that freeway where the abducted child, Polly Klass' body was found buried. As I proceeded driving on Highway 26W in Washington County, Oregon it became very clear to me that this area was definitely the same in appearance geographically as the area previously described in the Cloverdale, Sonoma County area. As you proceed on before the Glencoe exit on Highway 26W to the right is a heavily wooded forest area or grove in close proximity to Highway 26W. When I drove by this area yesterday there was a man surveying the highway. He looked as if he was a federal, state or county employee. He was wearing a neon jacket and had his surveyors equipment in full view of traffic headed west on Highway 26. He was standing in an open area before the heavily forested area on the right side of Highway 26W.

I went to the internet and googled: Kyron Horman Forest Grove Cornelius

Does all this lead to the cover up of red national socialist nazi John Demjanjuk? Is this a coven orchestrated from Germany, Berlin, South America to North America? Was he merely just a prison camp guard during WWII? Does this stem from the Wewelsburg Castle in Germany and the Mothers of Darkness Castle in Belgium? Is it this coven? Are they all monkey hybrids carrying out Hitler's agenda? Is this how Hitler never dies? How Hermann Goering never dies? How John Demjanjuk never dies? The hauntings?

This is common knowledge among nazi hunters is that the so called nazi hunter for the Simon Weisenthal/Wiesenthal Center bears an uncanny resemblance to a nazi war criminal. Is this why John Demjanjuk was catagorized as merely a nazi guard and nothing else? Another little lie or nazi dirty secret?

Who is this man pictured below as the leading nazi hunter for the Simon Wiesenthal Center globally? This is the man who vindicated nazi war criminal John Demjanjuk.

The Haunting continued... Meanwhile back to the geographical area of I-540 North and South and I-40 East and West, areas 35 and 37, namely highway exits in this location. Now let's go to another exit, Exit 13 to Alma by the Boston Mountain area . I recognize the name Alma because this is Rick Buchignani mother's name. I met Alma and Rick Buchignani of the Buchignani family who resided in Healdsburg, Sonoma County, California when I was 19 years old. Buchy could be a nickname for Buchignani or for our own family doctor in Santa Rosa, Sonoma County, California when I was growing up in the 1960's, Gino Bucchianeri. My mother always called our family doctor Buchy for short. He was a good doctor.

Getting back to Exit 13 off I-540 N just outside Fort Smith, Sebastian County, AR headed toward Clarksville, Johnson County, AR. The Alma exit 13 to Boston Mountains vicinity also.

Could this Boston Mountains region have any affiliation to the secret life of James "Whitey Bulger"? To his association to the nazis and to red national socialism? I always wondered why Whtiey Bulger would want to be transferred to a penitentiary in Oklahoma which borders the state of Arkansas. Was it because of what is going on in the Boston Mountains area?

I think that inmates from the American mafia knew this or were onto him when he arrived at the Oklahoma penitentiary. Whitey Bulger died a horrific death in prison at the hands of the American mafia inmates. His head was severly bashed in and they cut him up into several pieces, dismembering him.

They always say that in finding dead bodies at the hand of the American mafia, the mafia will leave a message as to why the person killed met with their ill fated death. For an example, greed woud be finding a dead body with money strewn all over and stuffed into their shirt jacket pockets.

Trump Raps Clinton For Shifting TPP Position

Monday's presidential debate saw Hillary Clinton and Donald Trump exchange blows over the proper direction of the nation's trade policy, with the real estate mogul doubling down on his protectionist strategy and criticizing the former secretary of state for shifting positions on the Trans-Pacific Partnership.

Obama's Climate Legacy At Stake In DC Circ. CPP Showdown

After months of court filings and surprising pretrial rulings, an en banc D.C. Circuit on Tuesday will finally hear oral arguments in the biggest environmental and energy case in years: a massive challenge to the legality of the Clean Power Plan.

Tougher EB-5 Rules Could Follow Election Season Gridlock

A Friday expiration date for the EB-5 immigrant investor program and upcoming elections mean lawmakers will likely act further down the road to toughen the troubled program's standards for qualifying projects and prevent abuses, but doing so will mean overcoming stark regional differences and other hurdles, experts say.

Report Suggests Paths To High Court Broadcasts, Term Limits

A group that wants the U.S. Supreme Court to adopt mandatory retirement ages or term limits and to begin broadcasting oral arguments says crisis, politics and closely watched cases have paved the way for those practices in some of the countries that have already implemented them and that the U.S. has ways to follow suit.

House Passes Cybersecurity, Transit, Food Security Bills

The House of Representatives passed bills Monday meant to tweak various parts of the country's security apparatus, ranging from the Department of Homeland Security's responsibilities for food and election security, to the amount of time that transit agencies can use grant money for security upgrades.

Fed's Stress Test Relief Unlikely To Stave Off Challenge

While the Federal Reserve's top regulatory official outlined plans Monday to make annual stress tests more predictable for regional banks, he said the Fed would hold firm in its refusal to give the biggest banks a peek at the testing process, even amid rumors of a potential legal challenge.

Please record our comments for the Reecommending Meeting on July 15 and City Council Meeting on July 17

For most of the first 18 years that we lived in Queensridge, we had a wonderful green space in the Badlands Golf Course. When we drove in the gate to Queensridge, we saw an expanse of green lawns and lush trees. We saw ponds filled with ducks and geese who used the ponds for themselves and their babies as a refuge until they flew each winter to a warmer climate, returning in the Spring. Although the golf course was always busy with golfers, we could stroll along the course's roads at any time. We live several blocks from the golf course, but it was always a source of enjoyment and restoration for us and was a symbol of the heart of Queensridge.

Since the development of Badlands began, the area has changed dramatically. The ponds have been drained and the birds have left. The grass has not been watered and has dried to brown, and the remaining dirt has converted to dust, desert shrubs, and hard dried ground. Many of the trees have been cut down to stumps. Now, when we enter the gate or walk on the road outside the golf course, we are confronted with huge signs warning in large red letters about no trespassing and no dumping with threats of prosecution..

Even if the developer was allowed to build, we have been told that he could build on the golf course land for at least 20 years, so that the disruption in the community from the construction could continue for decades. At the end of the process we would have lost our open green space, to be replaced by houses and apartments.

The only hope we have to restore any kind of normalcy is that the Open Space Ordinance remain in place. Now we are told that the City Council is considering repealing the ordinance. This will affect not just us in Queensridge, but other communities as well.

When the City Council is considering whether or not to repeal the Open Space Ordinance, please do not allow this disruption and ugliness to continue here or be inflicted on other areas of the Las Vegas community. If you are trying to improve the quality of life in Las Vegas to maintain a world class community, your planning must consider the restorative open green spaces and the emotional, cognitive, and physical health that nature provides to all of us. These green spaces should not just be limited to parks we can visit, but should be included within each development where ever possible.

Thank you for your consideration of this very serious matter.

Groupon to Pay $57 Million For IBM Patent Infringement

For years, IBM has accused Groupon Inc. of infringing on innovations — including a sign-in method dating back to the dawn of the internet. In July a jury awarded IBM $83 million in the case. IBM initiated the suit in March 2016, encompassing both a patent infringement claim and the cost of licensing IBM e-commerce innovations in the future.

DAYS UNTIL THE GREATEST LEGISLATIVE SESSION EVER BEGINS: 12

DAYS UNTIL THE STATE GOVERNMENT SHUTDOWN: 161

DAYS UNTIL THE 2016 ELECTION: 657

Good morning, everyone. I did not watch the State of the Union. Did I miss anything? For those of you who watched, will you remember any of it past last night? Doubtful.

I always love the local coverage, which seems to always have the same headline: "State of the Union divides Nevada delegates along party lines." You don't say? Not sure what's less spontaneous: Those reactions or the pro forma headline.

What's below: The sudden mayoral "race," Assembly GOP follies (again/still) and a trivia question about a Mormon pioneer.

Steve Wynn tries to get by.

ReidWatch: He was at work Tuesday to meet with caucus members, back home today, expected at the Capitol on Thursday. But will he run? Will he? Will he?

ANTHONY VS. GOODMAN

So Stavros Anthony is running against Mayor Carolyn Goodman? Who knew? Oh. Nevermind.

My instincts tell me you don't beat a Goodman in this town. The Family is…The Family.

But Carolyn is not Oscar. She does not scare people the way Oscar did and did not raise money (only $140,000 at that event last year) the way he did. But she has had two 2015 events and will get to seven figures if she needs it.

Anthony clearly is pinning his hopes on the stadium issue, which may have more potency than The Family wants to believe, especially in a low-turnout election. The arrogant, dismissive way that the city has handled this issue has been something to watch. And while it now seems unlikely the issue will qualify for the ballot, even if it doesn't, Anthony will make the race a proxy for the stadium. And, I'd guess, Bob Beers will be with him.

Today is the first council meeting since the Anthony candidacy became public. One word: Awkward.

WHAT DO YOU FIND IN AN OUTHOUSE?

My colleague, Ray Hagar, nicely captures the Michele Fiore silliness at that speech yesterday, one I also wrote about. I know you are all busy, but that video is worth watching just to see how scary she really is. Psychotropic drugs? Really?

Hagar picked up on her most bombastic claim – that she already has 11 other votes t block the governor's plan. Consider what that would mean: That 12 Assembly members are opposed without even seeing what it is, before the session starts? Is that possible? I surely hope not. But Gov. Brian Sandoval's nice-guy mien will not be enough to get this done. This will be one of the greatest political victories in state annals if he can get it done – or even most of it. This will be about holding the Democrats (notice us!) and cobbling together GOP votes from an Assembly caucus that is full of newcomers, short-timers and kooks.

Game on.

FLASH FACTS OF THE DAY

John O'Brien's first novel, published by Watermark Press in 1990 was a dark, romantic drama called Leaving Las Vegas. The main character is suicidal, gives up on his life, and heads to Las Vegas, NV to drink himself to death. While in Las Vegas, he forges a relationship with a prostitute. The book was made into a movie by MGM, directed by Mike Figgis, released on October 27, 1995 with the same title as the original novel. Shortly after production for the movie began, the novel's author, John O'Brien killed himself. The movie, however, was a critical success with Nicolas Cage and Elizabeth Shue in the lead roles. It was also one of the most successful movies that used Las Vegas has a base for its story (the movie grossed over $32 million at the box office). Leaving Las Vegas was nominated for four Academy Awards and four Golden Globe Awards. On January 21, 1996 in Los Angeles, CA, Nicolas Cage took home the Golden Globe for Best Actor in a Motion Picture Drama. On March 25, 1996, Nicolas Cage followed his Golden Globe win with an Academy Award for Best Actor for Leaving Las Vegas. Other, unsuccessful nominations for the film included Best Actress for Elizabeth Shue, Best Screenplay, and Best Director.

Leaving Las Vegas inspired a low budget, independent parody film released in 1997 called Eating Las Vegas, where the lead character heads to Las Vegas, NV to eat himself to death, and there befriends a bulimic prostitute. As far as I am aware, Eating Las Vegas did not win any awards.

TRIVIA QUESTION OF THE DAY

Today is the anniversary of the death of a man believed to be the first Nevada Mormon to hold national office. Who was it, and what offices did he hold?

Tuesday's winner: Lobbyist Cheryl Blomstrom (on a roll)

The question: Today is the birthday of a former Nevada elected official who held state and federal elected jobs and ran for another federal job. Whose birthday is it, and what are all of the elected jobs this person had?

The answer: Shelley Berkley, regent, assemblywoman, congresswoman.

1. Labor Day:

----- Forwarded Message -----

Subject: Labor Day

Dear Robert & Alice,

Labor Day isn't just about getting a day off from work or having a cookout.

It's about remembering the contributions that workers and their unions have made to our country, our state, and our way of life -- and committing to equal, fair pay for equal work and to protecting benefits and safe conditions for all working people.

The labor movement has made life better for Americans throughout our history -- and here in Nevada service employees, builders, and other workers are still driving our economy to this day.

As governor, I'll be committed to defending the progress we've made and standing up for working people, because they've earned it.

So today, join me in thanking working men and women in Nevada and across the country.

Thanks,

Steve

To:Bob Song
Sep 3 at 4:16 PM

Hello Bob,

I hope you enjoyed the long weekend with your families and friends.

I spent the day meeting with voters and going door to door in Las Vegas talking about the issues on people's minds heading into the November election. Yes, it's Labor Day, but don't worry, it was more fun than work!

Welcoming supporters at our new field office in Henderson!

Whether I'm knocking on doors or talking to folks at meet and greets, I'm grateful for the thoughtful, productive, and honest conversations that people are willing to have with me. What I hear over and over is that Nevadans want solutions, not just talk. And the best solutions to the problems we face come from right here in this community -- not from Washington, and not from any pundits on TV.

On this Labor Day, I'm thinking about the unions in our state and beyond who have done so much in the fight for working families -- on fair pay, paid family leave, and the ability to retire with dignity. I am grateful to our friends in labor who have fought for these protections for working families.

As a mother of two and an education advocate who has watched thousands of young people move through our school system and into the workforce, I understand the important role that working Americans play in our economy. It's crucial that we continue to educate and empower working men and women at every step.

Thank you,

Susie Lee

Red-State Cities Face Uphill Battle To Keep Paris Pledge

Scores of U.S. cities say they will honor the goals laid out by the Paris climate agreement despite President Donald Trump's vow to pull out of the deal, but cities in climate-policy-resistant Republican states won't have as much leeway to clamp down on greenhouse gas emissions as their blue-state counterparts, experts say. President Barack Obama met with Senate leaders at the White House Tuesday to discuss a replacement for Supreme Court Justice Antonin Scalia, a meeting that proved fruitless when top GOP lawmakers refused to budge from the position that the next president should name the late justice's successor.

Supreme Court Finds ERISA Preempts State Claims Reporting

The Employee Retirement Income Security Act's reporting requirements trump those of individual states, including a Vermont requirement that self-insured employee health plans must report claims data, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled Tuesday in a victory for Liberty Mutual Insurance Co.

NJ Leaders Trade Barbs Over Christie's High Court Nominee

New Jersey's Senate president pledged Tuesday that Gov. Chris Christie's pick to fill a vacancy on the state's highest court would not receive a confirmation hearing, drawing ire from the governor, who renewed his nomination of the Superior Court judge a day earlier after legislative inaction ended an earlier bid.

FBI Chief Concedes Broadness Of IPhone Unlock Request

FBI Director James Comey acknowledged Tuesday that an order directing Apple to create a program to allow access to a mass shooting suspect's iPhone would open the way for the backdoor's potential future use, but argued that the tech giant would not let the tool fall into the wrong hands.

Dear Jamie:
Thank you for your passionate thesis on distracted drivers and their devastating impacts on human life. I am so sorry to learn of your accident and hope you continue to heal and repair both physically and psychologically from the senseless crash in which you were involved. Luckily for you, you were tended to at UMC in its Burn Unit --- one of the finest in the country. While HIPPA precludes my daughter mentioning you or your hospitalization in any way to me, I glad she and the Unit were there for you.
Regarding your assessments and suggestions, they are spot on in all areas, but I know there is no way to control all of the people all of the time, even some of the people some of the time…and most importantly, WHAT ONE EXPECTS, ONE MUST INSPECT, and each of these takes funding sources. There are no dollars there to hire personnel (law enforcement and others) to monitor all traffic, drivers, incidents on a 24/7 basis on all roads or even selected ones. FINES and INCREASING FINES are in place for violators even including prison time when occurrences are of severest nature. Education is in place in all the schools, in companies, offices, government employment…but sadly without strong enough impact to stop abuse. Take a look at the DARE program: decades of education on use of drugs and today there is more drug abuse than EVER before.
Every parent is to blame who does not parent his/her own child to be responsible, thoughtful, caring, helpful, considerate, accepting, law-abiding, compassionate, honest, involved, and so forth. Technology is a tool and a great one but also it has provided a very destructive pathway to abuse and what you are addressing is just one area where technology has fostered REAL NEGATIVES.
So what do you do:

1. Stay in the fight
2. Address the Nevada Legislature
3. Vote only for those who are honest and will get a GOOD JOB DONE (…not GLORY GRABBERS)
4. Remember what Susan j. Komen's SISTER has achieved … just one person NOT GIVING UP THE FIGHT.. the COUNTRY is FOLLOWING for a CURE FOR BREAST CANCER.

It takes each of us, one day at a time, one person at a time to MAKE A DIFFERENCE.
Continue to DO IT!

Dear Madam Mayor ,

My name is Jamie Farrar, I am an auto pedestrian survivor of a crash that occurred on January 3rd, 2013 I had the honor and pleasure of meeting you at a Survivor's Gala in 2015 and I believe your daughter, Cara was one of my nurses at UMCs Burn Unit.

The letter in which I draft to you now is one that I should have done long ago, but I was both very afraid and very busy getting my BSW at UMC. I was afraid because I am only one person in a sea of voices that I'm sure you hear on a daily basis in regards to the Valley's concerns Afraid that one voice coming from a highly educated woman with CP and a speech impediment would get lost in the shuffle .

With all due respect , ma'am, I refuse to be silent another moment! I thought that if I tuned off the news, crashes like the one that burned and semi paralyzed me would decrease , Instead, they have increased year by year, day by day- two in the last two days alone!

Attached is a paper that I wrote for my degree on ideas for social workers and for the city in order to reduce these accidents . I'd love the opportunity to meet with you to discuss these and other ideas I have!

Thank you for your time and consideration!
Sincerely ,

Subject: Stop coddling illegal aliens in Las Vegas!

Sent from Outlook

Mayor Goodman,
I was disappointed to watch you on your KCLV show Friday evening supporting illegal aliens. Worse yet was the inclusion of two guests, both of who were also advocates of illegal aliens. Wouldn't it have been fair to host an equal amount of speakers in opposition? Is the care and feeding of illegal aliens a part of the city charter? I doubt it. We need the illegal immigrants to return to their native countries. Your positions lure more of them here and encourage them to stay. Why don't you start looking out for US citizens first? Don't you realize that the reason people from third world countries sneak into the US is ultimately because they can't stand being around other third world people. Plenty of skilled people from developed countries are waiting patiently for admission to the US. Is it fair to reward those whose very first act into this county is illegal? You can disguise the problem by saying they are fleeing high crime rates, violence, rotten economy... but this deception hides the real reason. Why would you want to turn us into a third world country? If you feel so concerned about them, there is an easy solution: move to a third world country to help them where they are.

Please read:

The Immigration Solution, by MacDonald, Hansen & Malanga

While the cheapness of the immigrants' labor may benefit a very few industries and provide some upper and le-class families with cut-rate gardeners and nannies, it adds very little to our national standard of living. On the other side of the ledger, the costs these immigrants impose on US taxpayers for health care, schooling, welfare, and (all too often) incarceration far outweigh the benefits they offer. In California, the National Academy of Sciences found immigrant families cost each native-born household an additional $1,200 in taxes per year. Although a net loss for the US, such workers are an unalloyed boon for Mexico. Their ability to find work north of the border is an essential safety valve for Mexico's failed economy and stubbornly unreformed political culture, and the remittances these workers send home are indispensable to Mexico, constituting its second largest source of hard currency. No wonder the Mexican government – especially through its consuls in the US – vigorously fosters the illegal migration of its nationals into its northern neighbor. … But those earlier huddled masses of immigrants yearning to breathe free, however tired and poor they may have looked, were in fact on average more skilled than the native-born population of a century ago. In addition, the less-developed economy of that era also had a vastly greater need for immigrants without skills than does today's knowledge economy. More important, the US immigration system of that period was a machine for selecting the most enterprising and energetic migrants. With no welfare system whatever, those who came were those who thought they could make use of the opportunity and freedom America offered by their own efforts. Grateful for the chance, these newcomers were only too glad to assimilate to their new land as best they could, and their children did so wholeheartedly. Not so today. The first child born in America to an immigrant entitles his or her family to child-only welfare payments – a hefty-looking sum to a recent migrants from a peasant village. … Deprived of work, illegals would return home, just as 60 percent of immigrants from the first great migration eventually left these shores when they couldn't make it here. ...our new policy should select newcomers not because they are someone's brother or adult child or elderly parents, or because they successfully sneaked into the country some years ago, but because they have some special skill... that will enrich our nation. … Thousands arrive illegally from Mexico into California each year... They come in such numbers because a tacit alliance of Right and Left has created an open-borders policy, aimed at keeping wage labor cheap and social problems ever fresh, so that the ministrations of Chicano studies professors, La Raza activists, and all the other self-appointed defenders of group causes will never be unneeded. … nearly one quarter of California's inmates are aliens from Mexico. The pro-labor left found that the industrious new arrivals whom it championed eroded the wages of its own domestic low wage constituencies - the Labor Department attributes 50 percent of real-wage declines to the influx of cheap immigrant labor. … when I was ten, in 1963, all suburbanites mowed their own lawns – many with push mowers. Now almost everyone hires the job out. Nannies for toddlers and grannies, unheard of then, are now ubiquitous... Rural schools used to begin in mid-September to ensure that we natives could pick grapes to earn our school clothes and shoes. Today not a single student in California would do such hot, dirty work, now considered demeaning. … So we allow illegal aliens to obtain California driver's licenses – the foundation for all other means of legal identification – and to pay reduced in-state tuition at the University of California, thereby providing several thousand dollars in discounts not available to American citizens from out of state. Whether you break the law to reach California or immigrate legally, it makes little difference in how you drive, send your kids to college, or draw on the public services of the state. … I often suggest to teachers who tell aliens that our culture is racist, exploitative, and sexist that they should live in Mexico themselves to fathom why millions are dying to obtain what they so casually dismiss.

… America does not have a vast labor shortage that requires waves of low wage immigrants to alleviate; in fact, unemployment among native-born unskilled workers in high – consistently about double the nations' overall unemployment rate. … an unusual coalition of business groups, unions, civil rights activists, and church leaders thwarted the call for restrictions with passage of the inaptly names 1986 Immigration Reform and Control Act, which legalized some 2.7 million unauthorized aliens already here, supposedly in exchange for tougher penalties and controls against employers who hired illegals. The law proved no deterrent, however, because supporters, in subsequent legislation and court cases argued on civil rights grounds, weakened the employer sanctions. Meanwhile more illegals flooded here in the hope of future amnesties from Congress, while the newly legalized sneaked their wives and children into the country rather than have them wait for family-preference visas. The flow of illegals into the country rose to between 300,000 and 500,000 per year in the 1990's, so that a decade after the legislation that had supposedly solved the undocumented alien problem by reclassifying them as legal, the number of illegals living in the US was back up to about 5 million. … In many American industries, waves of low-wage workers have also retarded investments that might lead to modernization and efficiency. Farming, which employs a million immigrant laborers in California alone, is the prime case in point. Faced with a labor shortage in the early 1960's, when President Kennedy ended a 22-year-old guest-worker program that allowed 45,000 Mexican farm hands to cross over the border and harvest 2.2 million tons of California tomatoes for processed foods, farmers complained but swiftly automated, adopting a mechanical tomato-picking technology created more than a decade earlier. Today, just 5,000 better-paid workers – one-ninth the original workforce – harvest 12 million tons of tomatoes using the machines. The savings prompted by low-wage migrants may even be minimal in crops not easily mechanized. … If the benefits of the current generation of migrants are small, the costs are large and growing because of America's vast range of social programs and the wide advocacy network that strives to hook low-earning legal and illegal immigrants into these programs. A 1998 Nationals Academy of Sciences study found that more than 30 percent of California's foreign-born were on Medicaid... compared with 14 percent of native –born households. The foreign-born were more than twice as likely as the native-born to be on welfare, and their children were nearly five times as likely to be in means-tested government lunch programs. Native-born households pay for much of this, the study found, because they earn more and pay higher taxes – and are more likely to comply with tax laws. Recent immigrants, by comparison, have much lower levels of income and tax compliance.

... This call for 'human rights' is a clever one, for it hides its radical status in a rhetorical safe harbor. What, exactly, are the 'human rights' that the US is denying illegal aliens? They have unfettered access to free medical care, free education, welfare for their children, free representation in court when they commit crimes, every due process protection during criminal prosecution that the Constitution guarantees citizens and legal immigrants, the shelter of labor laws, and the miracles of modern industrial society like clean water, the control of infectious diseases (including the ones they bring with them), and plumbing. The only putative 'right' they lack - and that, of course, is the 'human right' to which they and their ambassadors refer - is the right to legal status regardless of illegal entry. ....

No one will take the assurance that 'this time we mean business' seriously. If the executive branch is not willing to enforce the current law against violators, a new set of laws will not suddenly strengthen its resolve... border defenses have been fortified over the years, but the drill has been: if you can get past the border patrol, you are home free. The most important action the government could take to end illegal immigration would be to penalize employers that unlawfully hire illegal aliens... After 9/11, the department of Homeland Security deported fifteen hundred illegal Pakistanis. An additional fifteen thousand then left voluntarily, reports Jessica Vaughan of the Center for Immigration Studies. There is no reason to think this enforcement-through-attrition strategy won't work as well for Hispanic illegals. ...

It would be useful for open-borders optimists to spend some time in the Los Angeles Unified School District, which is 73 percent Hispanic, and where just 40 percent of Hispanic students graduate. (Nationwide, 53 percent of Hispanics graduate from high school...) Of those Hispanic students who do graduate, just 22 percent have completed the course work necessary for admission to a four-year state college - which means that of all Hispanic students who enter in ninth grade, fewer than 15 percent will graduate ready for college. Immigrant advocates have fiercely opposed in court a long-deferred California high school exit exam, which would require students to answer just over 50 percent of questions testing eight-grade-level math and ninth-grade-level English. The California Research Bureau predicts that if the exam becomes a reality, Hispanic graduation rates would drop well below 30 percent. ... Schools spend huge sums trying to improve the Hispanic graduation rate, even hiring 'outreach consultants' for dropout prevention. One Santa Ana consultant's approach is predictably multicultural. "We need to teach teachers that students need to be proud of where they are coming from," she told me. But, of course, Hispanic school failure derives not from ethnic neglect - the Sana Ana schools glorify the Hispanic heritage to a fault...
...a high level of immigration translates to increased levels of crime. Between the foreign-born generation and their American children, the incarceration rate of Mexican American jumps more than eightfold...
Pro-amnesty forces promote that illegal immigrants "risk everything for the dream of freedom"... However lousy the Mexican economy, there are few, if any, political freedoms enjoyed by Americans that Mexico denies. It is the Yankee dollar, not untasted freedom, that brings the vast majority of illegals here.

...in spring 2006 American witnessed millions of illegal aliens who not only were unapologetic about their illegal status but were demanding that their hosts accommodate their own political grievances, from providing driver's licenses to full amnesty. The largest demonstrations - held on May Day, with thousands of protesters waving Mexican flags and bearing placards depicting the Communist insurrectionist Che Guevara - only confirmed to most Americans that illegal immigration was out of control and beginning to become politicized along the lines of Latin American radicalism. I chronicled in Mexifornia the anomaly of angry protesters waving he flag of the country they vehemently did not wish to return to , but now the evening news beamed these images to millions. In short, the radical socialism of Latin America, seething in the angry millions who flocked to support Venezuela's Hugo Chavez, Bolivia's Evo Morales, and Mexico's Andres Lopez Obrador, had now seemingly been imported into our own largest cities. ...

Crippled America

We are the only nation in the world whose immigration system places the needs of other nations ahead of our own. … Too many people have forgotten the Mariel boatlift. … The Mexican government has published pamphlets explaining how to illegally emigrate to the US. … It's a great way for those governments to get rid of their worst people without paying any price.... Operation Wetback... was successful. It was a joint effort between the INS and the Mexican government. Special immigration teams were created to quickly process and deport illegal immigrants. One of the reasons it worked is that people who were caught were given to Mexican government agents, who moved them into central Mexico, where they could find jobs. ...In the first year, more than one million people were sent back. ...Why should we absorb the expense of keeping criminals in prisons? Let their countries of origin deal with the problems they sent us. If they refuse to take them back, we can stop issuing visas to those countries, preventing their citizens from legally visiting the US. I also would triple the number of immigration officers we currently employ until the wall is built. … Currently there are about 5,000 officers attempting to enforce the existing immigration laws against the more than 11 million illegal aliens. Compare that to the... 35,000 officers in the New York Police Department. Since 9/11 we have tripled the size of the border patrol but haven't substantially increased the number of ICE officers – the officers who enforce immigration laws. … We have to cut off federal grants to sanctury cities... We need to have real penalties for people who overstay their visas. … Most important is ending or curtailing so-called birthright citizenship, or anchor babies. … It is estimated that about 300,000 of these children are born here annually. That's 300,000 children who are entitled to all the rights and privileges granted to American citizens because their mothers entered this country illegally... There are businesses that specialize in making this happen!

They call it 'birth tourism'…. And those people take advantage of the system and come here illegally should never enjoy the benefits of being a resident – or citizen – of this nation. So, I am against any path to citizenship for undocumented workers or anyone else who is in this country illegally. They should – and need to – go home and get in line. And you know who agrees with me? The Mexicans, the Chinese, and all the people from other countries who want to be here legally and can't get a visa or fit into a quota... We can be generous and do all of this humanely. But the security and prosperity of American citizens have to come first. .. (Chapter 3)

I believe in putting the needs of American citizens first, always.... There's an old phrase that, sadly, you rarely hear anymore, "Made in America". We will start saying this again. (Chap. 10)

Please record our comments for the Reecommending Meeting on July 15 and City Council Meeting on July 17

For most of the first 18 years that we lived in Queensridge, we had a wonderful green space in the Badlands Golf Course. When we drove in the gate to Queensridge, we saw an expanse of green lawns and lush trees. We saw ponds filled with ducks and geese who used the ponds for themselves and their babies as a refuge until they flew each winter to a warmer climate, returning in the Spring. Although the golf course was always busy with golfers, we could stroll along the course's roads at any time. We live several blocks from the golf course, but it was always a source of enjoyment and restoration for us and was a symbol of the heart of Queensridge.

Since the development of Badlands began, the area has changed dramatically. The ponds have been drained and the birds have left. The grass has not been watered and has dried to brown, and the remaining dirt has converted to dust, desert shrubs, and hard dried ground. Many of the trees have been cut down to stumps. Now, when we enter the gate or walk on the road outside the golf course, we are confronted with huge signs warning in large red letters about no trespassing and no dumping with threats of prosecution..

Even if the developer was allowed to build, we have been told that he could build on the golf course land for at least 20 years, so that the disruption in the community from the construction could continue for decades. At the end of the process we would have lost our open green space, to be replaced by houses and apartments.

The only hope we have to restore any kind of normalcy is that the Open Space Ordinance remain in place. Now we are told that the City Council is considering repealing the ordinance. This will affect not just us in Queensridge, but other communities as well.

When the City Council is considering whether or not to repeal the Open Space Ordinance, please do not allow this disruption and ugliness to continue here or be inflicted on other areas of the Las Vegas community. If you are trying to improve the quality of life in Las Vegas to maintain a world class community, your planning must consider the restorative open green spaces and the emotional, cognitive, and physical health that nature provides to all of us. These green spaces should not just be limited to parks we can visit, but should be included within each development where ever possible.

Thank you for your consideration of this very serious matter.

Trump's Proposed 2018 Budget Will Double FDA User Fees

This month, the Trump administration announced its budget blueprint for fiscal year 2018, which proposes to cut funding from the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services and offset the shortfall in funding by increasing user fees. The stated justification for this strategy is seemingly based on the popular but distorted view that there's "a big logjam of wonder drugs that's having to work its way slowly through a thin hallway full of persnickety bureaucrats," say Jason Drori and David Rosen of Foley & Lardner LLP.

Carnage within the Clark County Family Court System

VIA MAIL

Chief Judge Elizabeth Gonzalez
Eighth Judicial District Court
200 Lewis Avenue
Las Vegas, Nv. 89155

Subject: Carnage Within the Clark County Family Court System

Dear Judge Gonzalez:

We are writing to bring to your attention what appears to be a dire situation in Clark County's family court system. As the Chief Judge, we urge you to please take immediate steps to investigate the situation.

As you may be aware, Veterans In Politics International, Inc. ("VIPI") is a government watchdog organization and media outlet. Pursuant to numerous past and recent complaints we received about abuses by family court judges, we recently put together a team of court observers to sit in on various family court hearings.

What we found surprised even us.

Below is a sample list of abuses, numerous of which we personally observed and others of which were reported to us. While some of the litigants involved in the cases mentioned below were represented by counsel whom you would think would be able to protect their clients, we believe that the problems are so systemic and entrenched that there is often little a lawyer can do to rectify the situation especially if his/her client has no means to pay for an appeal. Particularly in family court where there are also many pro se litigants, the injustice is even more profound.

We are copying each of the Justices of the Supreme Court, the heads of the state's legislative judiciary committees, the FBI's division of public corruption, Nevada's Attorney General and Clark County's Chief County Commissioner, so that everyone in key decision-making positions can be aware of the problems, and can take action to investigate and rectify what appears to be a horrendous situation.

At the end of this letter, we also list key laws and policies that we believe should be changed or implemented to help mitigate the abuse in the future.

Also, please note that on April 16, 2017 we created a Facebook page entitled War Declared on Clark County Nevada Family Court System.

In the short time it has been up, we have received hundreds of complaints from litigants who believe they were victimized by our family courts. We invite you to visit the site and review their comments.

Below are examples of what we believe are systemic violations in family court:

1. Violations of the 5th Amendment Right Against Self-Incrimination

The Fifth Amendment guarantees our right against self-incrimination. Yet, family court judges are routinely violating this right by ordering civil litigants to undergo drug testing. In some cases, litigants agree to take these tests out of fear that the Court will deny custody and/or visitation with their child should the litigant refuse to take a drug test. Yet, it is well known that civil courts cannot order a litigant to undergo a drug test, and should not make any inference from the fact that a litigant may not want to submit to one. Drug testing is reserved for criminal cases, not civil cases.

We have also received information, but are not in a position to confirm, that a certain family court judge who often orders drug testing from a Nevada service provider, may have a financial interest in that provider, and fails to disclose this to litigants. We are available to give you the names of the judge and the service provider.

We have also received information from several litigants, which information we are again not in a position to confirm but ask that you or others cc'd on this letter do so, that this same service provider is intentionally overcharging litigants, issuing false positives on their reports, and sometimes remotely turn off ankle bracelets or otherwise alter them, so that when a litigant "messes" with the devise to see what is wrong with it the litigant is accused of illegally "tampering" with the device and more revenue is generated for the provider in dealing with this.

We are informed that the facility is geared to keep litigants "in the system" for financial reasons. Again, we will give you the name of this provider separately and we ask that you and/or others cc'd on this letter please look into this.

2. Misadjudication of Military Veterans Benefits Exemptions

Military service connected disability benefits are exempt under federal law, and more recently under Nevada law as well, from all garnishments including taxes, collections, bankruptcies and levies. In Clark County, however, family court judges count these disability benefits towards child support and alimony. VIPI lobbied for Assembly Bill 140 and 271, which passed into law, stating that a veteran's service connected disability benefits cannot be used in connection with alimony payments. However, family court judges are disregarding this law. We recently filed a complaint with Family Court Presiding Judge Hoskins about this, but have not heard back.

3. Over-Priced Third Party Service Providers; Children Being Held Hostage Until Payment is Made; Violations of Relocation Rules.

Judges in family court appear to be ordering litigants to use court appointed third party service providers, such as family therapists, at prices that appear excessively high.

D-05-331190, the Velasco case: Judge Mathew Harter ordered the parties to retain third party therapist, Claudia Schwarz, M.A., L.M.F.T., for a child custody evaluation at a price reportedly set by the evaluator at a flat $8,000. Judge Harter ordered each party to pay half of the fee. When Mom couldn't pay her half of the fee, the judge awarded full custody to Dad and told Mom that she wouldn't see her child until her half of the bill was paid. Consequently, Mom has not seen her child for several months. Not only is holding the child as hostage for bill payment unlawful and outrageous, but our investigation indicates that the typical court appointed evaluator should only cost between $800 to $3,000. On what basis was $8,000 ordered, and who is receiving these extra fees? We recently filed a Judicial Disciplinary Complaint about this, and a complaint against Ms. Schwarz with the Nevada State Board of Marriage and Family Therapy. We have not yet heard back.

D-10-424830-Z, Abid v. Abid: Our information is that Mathew Harter in 2013 granted an evidentiary hearing on Dad's motion to relocate with the child. It's our understanding that notwithstanding that Dad never produced elements of relocation like a job, housing and proof of improvement for the child due to relocation, the judge nevertheless ordered a custody evaluation to be performed by psychologist Dr. John Paglini. This psychologist reportedly charged the litigants $14,000 for an evaluation. Afterwards, Dad indicated he didn't want to relocate and the parties settled. Judge Harter then reportedly ordered that if there were any further issues between the parties, they would have to retain a private Parent Coordinator, have the Parent Coordinator handle the issue (and often write a report), all to be paid for by the parties before he would allow them to go to court. Neither party had requested this, and it appears unlawful to essentially place a financial barrier on litigants' access to court.

In our opinion, Judge Harter appears to rely especially heavily on third party service providers who seem to charge high rates. We ask that you please investigate why this is happening and whether Judge Harter is incentivized or receiving any benefits from these third parties.

4. Pro-Se Litigants Not Getting Sworn In Before Giving Testimony and Are Therefore Unable to Use Their Testimony on Appeal

In many cases we observed family court judges failing to swear in pro-se litigants when they give testimony. This procedural violation makes any evidence the litigant gives in court inadmissible on appeal. There is no reason for family court judges to fail to have witnesses, including pro-se litigants, sworn in before testifying.

5. Judicial Conflicts of Interests

Often family court judges have a personal or business relationship with attorneys who appear before them and either fail to disclose the relationship or fail to recuse themselves when recusal is appropriate.

D-08-395501-Z, Holyoak case: Judge Ochoa was presiding over this case, in which attorney Marshal Willick was representing Mom. We received information that Judge Ochoa failed to disclose that at the same time he was presiding over the case, Mr. Willick was also representing Judge Ochoa personally in a separate matter. So at the same time that Judge Ochoa was adjudicating a case in which Mr. Willick was representing a party, Mr. Willick was also representing the Judge in a separate matter, and the Judge failed to disclose it.

D-12-471941-P, Yury Fedotov vs. Olga Ciesielski: Mom was unrepresented by counsel throughout the proceedings. Dad was represented by attorney Edward Kainen. Family court judge, Denise Gentile, was renting a room from Mr. Kainen (Dad's attorney) at the time she presided over the matter. The judge disclosed the relationship, but did not recuse herself, choosing instead to simply promise to be unbiased. The judge should have recused herself given that she was living with the lawyer in the case, particularly since the other litigant was unrepresented, and should have at a minimum avoided the "appearance of impropriety." We are advised that at one point, after Mom testified on her own behalf in a hearing, Dad's lawyer reportedly asked the judge words to the effect of "Who are you going to believe, [Mom] or me, your friend of 20 years?" According to our information, Judge Gentile's orders ultimately did not reflect neutrality. In that case, Judge Gentile did not schedule a hearing that Mom asked for in connection with enforcing a prior stipulated custody order, and instead, entered a revised order that was submitted by Dad's lawyer on an ex parte basis, without Mom's opportunity for input and without a hearing. The revised order changed Mom's custody rights and gave Dad sole legal custody. This also appears to have been a violation of Mom's Due Process rights.

6. Lack of Due Process for Litigants; Failure to Follow the Rules of Evidence

Judges are making decisions that affect people's lives based on unsubstantiated allegations instead of based on actual evidence. This is a violation of the due process rights of the litigant who is on the receiving end of the ruling.

D-16-537243-D, Johnson case: We are advised that Judge Bryce Duckworth ordered a litigant install an intoxalock device on his vehicle on a mere allegation, without any evidence, of alcohol abuse. The litigant had to pay for this device and have it installed.

D-13-488682-D, Pelkola v. Pelkola: Dad is a retired USAF Sargent in good standing, and is now a civilian contractor at Creech AFB. We are advised that Judge Elliott took the following unwarranted actions in this case based on Mom's beliefs instead of based on evidence.

a. Dad was ordered to not drink any beer at least 12 hours before his visitation and during his visitation; this was based on Mom's belief that Dad's DUI three years prior meant that he was an alcohol abuser. We are advised that there was no evidence of present alcohol abuse.

b. Dad was ordered to take gun safety classes even though he had 20 years of military firearms training, and ordered LVPD to inspect Dad's gun storage at his residence. This was reportedly based on Mom being afraid of guns and upset that Dad bought their 7 year old son a BB gun. Dad reportedly bought the BB gun to teach his son self-defense and only let him use under supervision.

c. Judge ordered the removal of a service dog from the home; the dog belonged to a household member who has Asperger's Syndrome. We are advised that there was just an allegation, but no evidence, that the dog was violent or posed a threat.

D-15-518905-D, McDonald vs. McDonald: We received information that Judge Linda Marquis proceeded with a parental termination trial even though Dad's lawyer committed suicide shortly before the hearing, and Dad requested a continuance of the trial so he could secure new counsel. Dad's request was denied and Dad was required to proceed with the trial unrepresented, losing visitation rights with his children.

7. Sealing Cases

The Nevada Supreme Court has recognized, consistent with federal law, that the public has a constitutional First Amendment right to access court documents and proceedings, absent a finding by the court that there is a compelling state interest in keeping a particular document or hearing private, and moreover, the portion kept private must be the minimum necessary to protect the compelling interest. See family law case, Del Papa v. Steffen, 915 P.2d 245, 248 (1996), ("a state may deny this right of public access only if it shows that the denial is necessitated by a compelling government interest, and is narrowly tailored to serve that interest.")

Cases in family court are getting sealed without a showing of a compelling state interest, and sometimes, without any express written order at all.

Further, when a case is sealed in family court, the family law clerks are removing the entire case from public access. The case completely "disappears" from public online records searches and even from the court's attorney online records searches. It is as if the case does not exist. This is a violation of NRS 125.110(1) which requires that certain documents and information, such as the case name, number, summons, court orders, etc. remain accessible to the public even when cases are sealed. The Nevada Supreme Court has been very clear on this point, stating that it is a manifest abuse of discretion of the court to seal entire cases. See, Johanson v. District Court, 182 P.3d 94 (2009).

8. "Closed Hearings" Where Only Court Observers are Kicked Out

In our efforts to monitor family courtrooms, we were often kicked out of the courtroom on the premise that the "hearing is closed." This occurred even in courtrooms where there were no litigants standing before the court and the hearings had not even commenced. Moreover, we noticed that we were the only ones who were being kicked out, while litigants, attorneys and others were permitted to remain in the courtroom. If the hearings were actually closed, then NRS 126.211 requires that all those who are not involved in the case be kicked out and not just those whom the Judge or the Marshals feel like kicking out.

We were subjected to this primarily in the courtrooms of Judge Robert Teuton, Judge Cynthia Giuliani, Hearing Master Jon Norheim courtrooms. In one such hearing, we were told that the hearing was one dealing with adoption and was therefore closed. When we asked why the many other people were allowed to remain in the courtroom, we were told by the Marshal "it's a big family." We recently filed a complaint about this with the family court; we have not yet heard back.

9. Marijuana Consumption Being Punished

Marijuana consumption is legal under Nevada state law for medical purposes and most recently, for recreational use, but judges appear to be punishing parents for consuming marijuana.

D-17-552831-C, the Amanda Macias case: Senior Retired Judge Nancy Saitta, who sat for family court Judge Jennifer Elliot told the litigant if he tested dirty for marijuana he will only have supervised visits with his child.

10. District Attorney Child Support Division

There are litigants who are owed over $50,000, and in some cases over $100,000, in child support arrears. The D.A.'s office is supposed to help those litigants collect unpaid child support, yet many are not getting the D.A.'s assistance despite repeated requests. Examples are the cases of Colleen Smith (case D-08-399100 and R-13-179244) who was owed about $75,000 and the case of Beatriz Trujillo (case no. R078764) who is owed over $100,000. We have recently reached out to the D.A. on these two cases who has launched an investigation on these cases.

11. Hearing Masters Issuing Bench Warrants

We observed Hearing Master Sylvia Teuton stating that she is "issuing a bench warrant" when hearing masters are not allowed to issue bench warrants. We have seen bench warrants that were actually signed by the hearing masters him/herself. This is clearly beyond the authority of a hearing master. We recently filed a complaint with the Presiding Judge of Family Court, but have not yet heard back.

12. Ex-Parte Communications

D-12-467820-D, Silva matter: The mother is a pro-se-litigant and Clark County family court Judge Rena Hughes removed the mother from the courthouse property and proceeded with the hearing adjudicating custody of the child with only the father and his attorney and the minor unrepresented 12 year old daughter present. The Judge harshly interrogated the young girl as the girl sat alone at counsel table without her Mom or any representation and lied to the girl threatening to throw her in jail at Child Haven. Not only did the judge traumatize the child, but this was a complete violation of the Mom's rights and constituted a court-ordered ex parte communication/hearing with the judge. We filed a judicial disciplinary complaint against Judge Hughes on this and were advised that an investigation is underway and Judge Hughes was required to recuse herself from the case.

13. Parent's Right to Educate

D-14-505292-C, Tiffany Wagner case: We were advised that Judge Rena Hughes took away Mom's right to provide a home IEP (Individual Education Program) for her 3 year old disabled daughter even though she had been caring and obtaining special services for her daughter at home since birth and there were no problems. There was no showing as to why the services could not be performed in Mom's house. This is a violation of Mom's due process rights and her right to care and educate her child at home instead of in a facility. Under Nevada Senate Bill 314 all parents have a fundamental right to educate their child; this bill is now law. We filed a judicial complaint against Judge Hughes on this and have not yet heard back.

14. Juvenile Court

Does the punishment fit the crime?

We observed Melissa De La Garza, a Juvenile Hearing Master, during her court calendar on July 7, 2017 from 11am to 12pm. During that single hour, we found numerous instances of unfair and excessive penalties to children, all of whom were minorities, and all of whom were still in custody when we left the courtroom.

a. A 14 year old boy was in custody for "petty larceny." Turned out his crime was stealing a bottle of water from a Clark County truck. This occurred during scorching weather in Clark County. The boy was ordered to remain in custody, he was sentenced to take a Petty Larceny class, was given probation and ordered to wear a GPS ankle bracelet. All this punishment, child trauma, and tax dollars spent for stealing a water bottle during the heat of the summer.

b. In another case, a 17 year old girl was in custody for "walking away from a police officer" and violating the curfew law. The girl was booked for "obstruction of an officer," she was ordered to be detained, and was inexplicably deemed to be "a danger to the community and a danger to herself."

c. A 15 year old boy was in custody for smoking (not selling or distributing) a marijuana joint. He was sentenced to six months probation, Thug Class suspended, community service, ordered to attend a drug awareness program and was ordered to have a mentor. All this, for smoking a joint.

15. Cases Excessively Prolonged:

D-11-449918-C, Terabelian vs. Klatt: Our information is that this case has been prolonged/canceled 8 times. Judge Marquis had continued it 8 times, before the plaintiff got a new lawyer, who happened to be on Judge Marquis' recusal list, and the case was therefore transferred to Judge Rebecca Burton. We have learned of numerous other cases in which Judge Marquis has unnecessarily postponed cases.

D-09-408072-7, Plog v. Plog: This case has been ongoing for eight years. The judge is Bryce Duckworth. We observed Mr. Plog break down in open court saying that he simply can't take more family court proceedings - the protracted litigation has killed his will to fight, and that he's at the point of giving up all his rights, stop fighting for his daughter, and just commit suicide!

This is one example of the toll that protracted litigation is having on people and families. There is no reason for our family courts to be party to inflicting this kind of torment on those before them.

16. Judge Inexplicably Stops Mom's Collection of Child Support Arrears

D-13-486094-D, in the matter of Marisella Barry: Our information is that Mom had a court order from two prior judges for child support arrears that was being enforced by the District Attorney Child Support Division case UPI-076902200A. Judge Rena Hughes inexplicably stopped all collections of arrears without any legal cause or hearings.

17. Judge Wrongfully Detained Mother and Children

D-10-43924-Z, the Kerrigan case: Our information is that Judge Cheryl Moss locked Mom up for not turning the children over to an abusive Dad for visitation. Dad had been convicted of domestic battery, DUI, and had a protective order against him by a girlfriend. The 2 children involved also did not want to go to their abusive Dad, so the judge banished them both to Child Haven.

18. Violation of Nevada Custody Laws

Vincent Ochoa: In a 2014 radio interview on AM 720, in which attorney Michele Lobello was interviewing Judge Ochoa during his re-election campaign, Judge Ochoa blatantly admitted that he does not grant overnight visits for the first six months of the life of a child to the father. Judge Ochoa admitted to factoring the gender of the parent into his custody orders, which was a violation of then-in-effect NRS 125.480 which provided that "preference must not be given to either parent for the sole reason that the parent is the mother or the father of the child."

D-14-505292-C, Tiffany Wagner case: Judge Rena Hughes reportedly denied Mom her first right of refusal to babysit her own child and instead ordered the child to stay with a babysitter for Dad, even though Mom was available and wanted to care for her child.

19. Unethical Behavior By a Judge

Vincent Ochoa: D-10-432708-D, Smith vs. Vaughn case: "Ashley," once known as Divinity James, changed her model name to Chevy Nicole to hide the fact that she was still performing online and doing porn with the child at home. Our information is that while presiding over her case, Judge Ochoa "friended" her on his personal Facebook page, as well as personally "liking" her nude pictures as of August 15, 2014, and pictures of the minor child that he took away from Dad. Mom in turn "likes" his personal page and his re-election page. We previously complained about this to the Judicial Discipline Commission which indicated it would conduct an investigation, but we were never advised of the outcome. There has been no transparency on this matter.

Judge Harter: According to an incident report written by an officer of the Police Department, Judge Harter's son was found to be in possession of stolen property inside Judge Harter's home including a hand gun, ammunition, and drugs. The property was from a burglary of a police officer's home. Several teens who were friends of Judge Harter's teen son were arrested and convicted in connection with the incident, yet Judge Harter's son was never arrested, and was whisked off to live with his mom in Utah, which is surprising given that in divorce papers Judge Harter reportedly stated that she was a drug abuser. In any event, we ask that you look into whether Judge Harter used his influence to keep his son from being arrested and prosecuted. We previously reported this to the Judicial Discipline Commission and were advised, without any reason given, that they would not pursue this matter.

Judge Linda Marquis: D-10-424830-Z, Abid v Abid: We received information that in 2015, Judge Marquis ignored settlements between parents to have joint physical custody, ignored a binding order issued by a judge who preceded her, and allowed an illegally recorded conversation that Mom had with a third party in Mom's home, to be played in open court (against NRS 200.650) and to be used against Mom by an expert witness. The conversation had been taped by Dad who had slipped a recording device into his child's backpack to secretly record private conversations in Mom's home. Such taping is a class D felony under NRS 200.690 and should have been thrown out and sanctioned. When Mom objected to its use in court, arguing that it was a violation of her Fourth Amendment rights of privacy, Judge Marquis reportedly replied words to the effect of: "Fourth Amendment Rights certainly don't exist in this courtroom".

20. Laws and Policies that We Believe Need to Be Changed:

a. Closing Hearings And Sealing Documents:

As stated above, court proceedings are supposed to be open to the public as a matter of First Amendment constitutional right. In the family law case of Del Papa v. Steffen, 915 P.2d 245, 248 (1996), the Nevada Supreme Court held that courts are presumptively open to the public and "a state may deny this right of public access only if it shows that the denial is necessitated by a compelling government interest, and is narrowly tailored to serve that interest." See also, Civil Rights for Seniors, Non-profit Corp. v. Admin. Office of the Courts, 313 P.3d 216, 129 Nev.Adv.Op. 80 (Nev. 2013) (the public has a First Amendment right of access in criminal and civil judicial proceedings). This indeed is the law nationwide. NRS 1.090 also recognizes this important public policy and provides that "the sitting of every court of justice shall be public except as otherwise provided by law."

NRS 432B.430(c): This statute provides for the mandatory closing of hearings in all family law cases in which the court must determine whether there is enough evidence of neglect or abuse to remove a child from his/her home, unless the judge finds that keeping the proceedings open is in the best interest of the child. First, this blanket across-the-board requirement to close such hearings, without a case by case analysis showing a compelling state interest and a finding of the least intrusive method of closing such hearing, is unconstitutional. While one may think of a child's removal from the home as a sensitive issue, we believe this is the very reason it should be open to the public - so as to minimize the risk of abuse in the proceedings. There are indeed many criminal cases that are particularly sensitive, yet we view those as a society as especially warranting open review by the public. Again, the hearing may be closed on a case by case basis, but a compelling state interest must be shown in each case and the restrictions must be narrowly tailored. Secondly, the statute's requirement that the hearing only be open if it can be shown to be in the best interests of the child appears to make no sense, and appears to be an amorphous bar to reach.

NRS 432B.430(1)(a): This statute provides that proceedings pertaining to the permanent placement of the child are presumed to be open "unless the judge or master, upon his or her own motion or upon the motion of another person, determines that all or part of the proceeding must be closed to the general public because such closure is in the best interest of the child..." This statute is also unconstitutional. The test is not whether keeping a hearing open is in the best interests of the child. The legal test must be whether the state can show a compelling state interest, on a case by case basis, of the need to close the hearing, and to what extent the hearing needs to be closed - typically, only a portion of the hearing if any can be closed. The findings of such compelling state interest must be specifically argued and found to be compelling in the order closing the hearing. This is particularly true where the termination of parental rights is at stake. The public should have full transparency on such a vital issue.

Eighth Judicial District Court Rule 5.02 was repealed as of 1/27/2017, but it had provided for many years that family court cases could be "closed" to members of the public simply upon the request of one of the parties. No good cause or any other factors had to be shown or justified. This was unconstitutional. Many hearings were closed pursuant to this rule. The courts need to review whether any cases which are still open and which took advantage of this Rule without a showing of a compelling state interest stated on the record, continue to hold such closed hearings. The judges must be instructed to abide by constitutional protections for open court before granting such closed hearings again in those or other cases.

b. Judges' Campaign Financing:

We have seen for years that judges running for re-election are soliciting campaign funds and the throwing of fundraisers from lawyers and/or parties who have open cases before them. This is not in keeping with a judge's requirement to avoid the "appearance of impropriety." The fact that a judge may disclose the campaign contribution on a government filed Contribution and Expense Report months later of is no import to avoiding the appearance of impropriety. By comparison, California requires the recusal of judges who accept more than $1,500 from any party or lawyer at any time during the prior 6 year period.

In Nevada, judges are making calls to litigants' counsels and asking for and accepting up to $10,000 for their campaigns while their case is pending. We have also spoken to numerous lawyers who have felt pressured to contribute to the judge when he/she calls for money, or feel compelled not to contribute to a different candidate they would otherwise support, because they have an open case before the judge asking for funds and are afraid of retaliation. This practice of taking money when there are open cases, which is not even engaged in by our politicians in Nevada, is fertile ground for corruption and results in a loss of trust in our judicial system - a system that is supposed to serve as the very safeguard against corruption.

c. Jury Trials for Termination of Parental Rights and Relocation of Children:

The termination of parental rights and the relocation of a child away from one of the parents invoke such fundamental rights of parenting that they should be subject to a jury trial, rather than being subject to the decision of one person.

d. Judge Meetings Should Be Subject To Open Meeting Laws or At Least Open to the Public:

Nevada's judges are elected officials. Yet they routinely hold private meetings. These meetings should be subject to Open Meeting Laws or at a minimum be open to the public. We recently asked to sit in on a family court judicial meeting and were turned away at the door. We also asked to at least get a copy of the agenda for the meeting, and were again advised by the court officials, including counsel, that we could not have a copy of the agenda. When we asked to be put on the agenda for the next judicial meeting in order to express our concerns about numerous abuses, we were advised that we would not be put on the agenda.

There is no question that our courts need to be as transparent as possible. Secret meetings, where secret agenda items are discussed, no agenda is available to the public, and no minutes are available to the public do nothing to foster the public's confidence in our court system, and serves as fertile ground for corruption, particularly in a court system that is already fraught with impropriety.

e. Transparency Needed in Disciplinary Proceedings and With Disciplinary Complaints:

Presently, when someone files a complaint with the state bar or with the judicial disciplinary commission the complainants simply get a letter stating whether the commission is proceeding with an investigation or not. If there is no investigation, the commission does not give the complainant any reasons for its decision or a copy of the judges/lawyer's response to their complaint. This can give the complainant the impression that the commission simply didn't want to act for whatever nefarious reason. If there is a reason for not proceeding with an investigation, the complainant should be made aware of the reason.

Further, even when the commission or Bar proceed with an investigation and actually file a complaint against the judge or lawyer, there is no copy of that complaint made available to the public, and with regard to lawyers, the State Bar's website does not even show that any charges are pending or any proceedings or complaints have been filed against the attorney. The website instead continues to show that the attorney is "in good standing."

This is even the case after Bar finds the attorney guilty of malfeasance, and even if the lawyer has agreed to be suspended. The attorney's status is only changed once the Supreme Court has signed an order agreeing to the punishment of the attorney, which could be months later.

In the meantime, potential clients are unaware that there are any issues. Yet, the job of the Bar, and the Judicial Disciplinary Commission, is to protect the public - not to protect the lawyer or the judge. The public should be made aware if there is a proceeding pending, should have access to the pleadings and records, and should frankly even be entitled to sit in on hearings upon request. There is no reason for our disciplinary bodies to operate in the shadows, when their very existence is to protect the public. At a minimum, operating in secrecy diminishes public confidence in these public bodies, particularly since they are being called upon to rectify wrongdoing.

Conclusion:

It is our sincere hope that this letter prompts you and others who are copied on it to take action on these important issues. There is no doubt in our minds that the credibility of our family courts is at stake and that many litigants have lost hope of getting fair treatment.

We have even heard from several unrelated litigants that they have the impression that some judges purposely grant custody to abusive parents so that the protective parent has to keep fighting for custody and the family is forced to "stay in the system" churning fees for lawyers, third party service providers, and the entire "machine" of judges, hearing masters, juvenile court authorities, etc. that is involved in the multi-billion dollar generating family court system.

We certainly hope that is not the case, and ask that you please look into the above reports and do whatever you can to restore the public's trust in our family court system.

Please let us know the results of your investigation, and whether we can be of further help.

Sincerely,

Steve Sanson

How Criminal Rule 4 Is Changing

After consideration by the U.S. Judicial Conference's Advisory Committee on the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, a public comment period, litigation in district and appellate courts, and review by the U.S. Supreme Court, the U.S. Department of Justice may not have to wait much longer to serve federal criminal summons on foreign corporations, say attorneys with Paul Hastings LLP.

The Fed's Proposed Capital Rules Could Be Overly Complex

Assuming the building-block and consolidated approaches to insurer capital regulation are ultimately implemented in a manner consistent with the U.S. Federal Reserve's proposal for new capital standards, multinational insurance groups subject to the board's jurisdiction will soon face additional challenges in navigating an even larger patchwork of standards and regulations, say attorneys at Mayer Brown LLP.

Gov't Contractors Railroaded Again By The False Claims Act

While the U.S. Supreme Court's implied certification case Universal Health Services v. U.S. gets all the press, the quiet doubling of False Claims Act penalties by one small federal agency — the Railroad Retirement Board — could foreshadow a dramatic increase in FCA penalties by the U.S. Department of Justice and possibly other agencies later this year, say Tirzah Lollar and Ralph Mayrell of Vinson & Elkins LLP.

Start-Of-Construction Update Should Benefit Clean Energy

The latest "start of construction" guidance makes it easier for renewable energy developers to satisfy the IRS' requirements for the production tax credit, and will likely result in more projects being constructed with the associated increase in environmental and economic benefits, say attorneys with Mayer Brown LLP.

Event held May 19, 2017. Presented jointly with NBC News Digital.

EXPERT PARTICIPANTS

George Annas, Distinguished Professor at Boston University and Director of the Center for Health Law, Ethics & Human Rights at Boston University School of Public Health

Flaminia Catteruccia, Associate Professor of Immunology and Infectious Diseases, Harvard T.H. Chan School of Public Health

George Church, Professor of Genetics, Harvard Medical School; and Co-Founder, Editas and eGenesis

Howard Kaufman, Professor, Departments of Surgery and Medicine, Rutgers, The State University of New Jersey; Surgical Oncologist, Rutgers Cancer Institute of New Jersey; and member of the Recombinant DNA Advisory Committee at the U.S. National Institutes of Health

MODERATOR

David Freeman, Editorial Director, NBC News MACH

HIGHLIGHTS OF THE DISCUSSION

New techniques such as CRISPR and TALENS allow scientists to add, subtract or edit genetic material. These techniques have enormous promise for human health, but raise new ethical and regulatory questions. The public needs better education around these techniques and issues.

Gene drives are species-specific, unlike pesticides, so we could eradicate or sharply reduce the number of malaria-carrying mosquitoes worldwide, for example. But what might fill the resulting “empty niche”? What other environmental impacts might follow? And who is responsible for making the decision to release modified organisms into the wild? Use of gene drives requires strict monitoring and early response capacity.

Some gene editing therapies are approaching the clinical stage, including organ transplants between species—e.g., transplanting genetically-modified pig organs into humans. More than half the states have “right-to-try” laws allowing terminally ill patients to use drugs and techniques with Phase 1 approval (only for safety, not for efficacy), but exploitation in these cases is a real danger. Existing standards for informed consent may not be appropriate for these high-risk, high-stakes treatments. Thoughtful regulation is needed.

Gene drives have the potential to eliminate disease-carrying mosquitos?

Right-to-try laws leave desperate patients and their families vulnerable to exploitation.

Each expert offered policy recommendations at the end of the show.

Through in-person events paired with state-of-the-art interactive webcasting, The Forum at Harvard T.H. Chan School of Public Health convenes the best-informed and most influential scientists, policymakers, and practitioners to address worldwide health problems that require immediate decisions and practical solutions.

Harvard T.H. Chan School of Public Health brings together dedicated experts from many disciplines to educate new generations of global health leaders and produce powerful ideas that improve the lives and health of people everywhere. As a community of leading scientists, educators, and students, we work together to take innovative ideas from the laboratory to people's lives-not only making scientific breakthroughs, but also working to change individual behaviors, public policies, and health care practices. Each year, more than 400 faculty members at the Harvard Chan School teach 1,000-plus full-time students from around the world and train thousands more through online and executive education courses. Founded in 1913 as the Harvard-MIT School of Health Officers, the School is recognized as America's oldest professional training program in public health.

10 Years After Crisis, What We Still Need To Do

We can all sleep easier at night because financial reforms have produced a considerably strengthened banking system. This desirable state, however, should not lead to somnambulism. We must still attend to at least four areas of concern, say Rodgin Cohen and Mitch Eitel of Sullivan & Cromwell LLP. Read more »

High Transparency May Help SSOs Under Attack By DOJ

Member-driven standard-setting organizations have traditionally steered clear of antitrust focus despite their inevitable tendency for concerted action. However, new scrutiny espoused by Assistant Attorney General Makan Delrahim should lead SSOs to change protocol, says David Newman, leader of Gould & Ratner LLP's intellectual property group. CRA Review Of Bank Regulatory Guidance Is A Bad Idea

Following the recent determination that the Interagency Guidance on Leveraged Lending is subject to the Congressional Review Act, a congressman urged bank regulators to review all of their existing guidance and determine if any should be submitted to Congress. However, regulators should respectfully decline to do so, says Michael Silva, chairman of the financial services regulatory practice at DLA Piper. Read more »

Criticism Of FDA Citizen Petitions Is Often Misguided

In recent years, the U.S. Food and Drug Administration's citizen petition process has been attacked by critics for inappropriately delaying FDA approval of competing drug products. Though the process is not perfect, any assessment of the need for improvement should be based upon a clear understanding of the law and how it has actually operated over the last several years, says Scott Lassman of Goodwin Procter LLP. EXPERT ANALYSIS

How The Byrd Rule Slowed Down GOP Health Care Reform

While Republican leadership succeeded in securing 217 votes on Thursday to pass health care reform legislation in the House, standing in their way this past month has been a formidable obstacle: a rule devised by the late Sen. Robert C. Byrd as a feature of the budget reconciliation process, say Darryl Nirenberg and Chelsea Gold of Steptoe & Johnson LLP. Read more »

Regulatory Reform Agenda Opens Door For Public Input

While the ability of the public to petition an agency for action has traditionally been an important part of administrative law and procedure, two recent executive orders direct a new and ongoing process of regulatory evaluation that arguably provides enlarged platforms for stakeholders to help shape the balancing of agencies' regulatory priorities, say Avi Garbow and Bryson Smith of Gibson Dunn & Crutcher LLP. EXPERT ANALYSIS

The Truth Behind A President's Immigration Reform Promises

As Election Day gets closer, American voters continue to see presidential candidates Donald Trump and Hillary Clinton go head to head on U.S. immigration reform. However, whether the president has actual legal authority to influence immigration policy is one important question that is absolutely critical to the well-informed vote, say Victoria Morte and Amanda Nordby of Fragomen Del Rey Bernsen & Loewy LLP.

Schools Face Liability Risk From Ride-Hailing Services

Many students and parents are abandoning yellow school buses and parent carpools for ride-hailing services such as Uber and Lyft. While these methods of transportation may be a welcome alternative for parents, school administrators and legal counsel should be aware of the potential liability associated with permitting students to leave campus using such a service, says Dana Chang of Fisher & Phillips LLP.

NY Wage Regulations Could Face Major Changes

Recently proposed wage orders by the New York State Department of Labor include changes for both exempt and nonexempt employees. Assuming they are adopted, the new regulations will have a tremendous impact on how New York employers pay their workers, say Cindy Schmitt Minniti and Mark Goldstein of Reed Smith LLP.

4 Ways To Get Associates Trial-Ready

For young trial associates who want to evolve into young trial lawyers, getting the necessary experience is increasingly challenging. The only surefire way associates can become first chair advocates is through effective mentoring, and the best way to achieve effective mentoring is to incorporate it in your approach to cases, say Stephen Crain and Drew Taggart of Bracewell LLP.

DAYS UNTIL THE 2016 PRIMARY ELECTION: 253

DAYS UNTIL THE 2016 GENERAL ELECTION: 400

Good morning, everyone. The Fremont Cannon is coming South after a game in which the first half was awful and the second half was quite exciting. It was something to see UNR blow several opportunities to win that game and the incomprehensible play calling that short-circuited any rally. I saw a lot of people at the game, including the governor and his family. Brian Sandoval seemed relieved by the Ohio State squeaker.

I know UNLV is (justifiably) celebrating this victory, the second in three years over UNR. But this homer story seems a bit much. And bragging about scoring a touchdown against Michigan? Really? My favorite part was Coach Tony Sanchez's quote: "Winners always find a way, and so do losers." Oh, man.

Premium wrap, Morning Flash nuggets and a trivia question about a former party boss.

COMING UP

Tonight on "Ralston Live," we have Nick Phillips, who wants to be state GOP chairman; also, a Center for American Progress rep on a new study on families.

The Southern Nevada forum, the place where a lot of folks go every few months to chant southern solidarity slogans, meets this morning at Las Vegas City Hall.

PREMIUM WRAP

ICYMI, on Sunday I reported that Mark Lipparelli won't run and that Assemblyman Erv Nelson, who would have to move, is considering a bid to save the state from Sen. Victoria Seaman. Nelson apparently lives close and has a kid who lives in the district.

I also reported on just how impressive state Sen. Michael Roberson's haul was – second best in NV history for a first quarter of fundraising and fifth largest ever.

My insiders also had a couple of funny lines vis a vis Danny Tarkanian's candidacy: "Roberson's haul is incredible. That is more than $100k for each of Danny's losses." And: "I just want to see the list of people who donate to a guy who has lost 5 races. I want to sell them bridges."

And one of my insiders reminded me how the Nevada newspapers have abandoned DC: “What a huge loss for NV journalism with Steve Tetreault leaving the DC bureau of the RJ and not just because of his institutional knowledge. Now both the Sun and RJ (and RGJ) have zero presence in DC letting the 6 member delegation run free of accountability. National press cover Reid but they don't the other members. Day to day quotes, bill intros etc will be barely covered. Hard to overstate how sad this for the state, but by all means cover Sandoval's PR tour around the state with no mention of how his party wants all these state parks and national land to go private. “

A QUARTET OF MORNING FLASH NUGGETS

Nugget No. 1 – Presidential candidate (yes, he’s still in) Martin O’Malley is back in Vegas today and Tuesday, meeting with SEIU and Culinary folks today and then appearing at a Hispanics in Politics breakfast tomorrow.

Nugget No. 2 – One-term Assemblyman Brent Jones sent out a email Sunday slugged “Contact (sic) with Nevada” and contained this priceless sentence:

“By creating the ‘Contract with Nevada and joining with these legislators, we can be a force for integrity and restore Nevada to greatness.”

Yes, when I think of Brent Jones, I think of integrity and greatness.

Nugget No. 2 – Speaking of integrity and greatness, remember before the session when congresswoman-to-be Michele Fiore talked about therapists putting kids on psychotropic drugs and she was going to stop it. Well, now she knows what to do about mass shootings:

"Why don't we do studies on the medication all of these shooters were taking and take that medication off the market?

At what point does a person become a parody of herself?

Nugget No. 4 – The Center for American Progress has a new study about Nevada families. We will have a CAP member on “Ralston Live” tonight.

FAST FLASHES

Click and enjoy.

Zappos is weird.

Eric Trump explains to THE SUNDAY why his Dad’s hotel here is rejecting the Culinary.

FLASH FACTS OF THE DAY

In 1879 in Eureka, NV, a Labor Union Hall was under construction. The structure was sold to the Odd Fellows, who completed the building as their Odd Fellows Hall. Some references say that the union went on strike, and did not have the funds to complete their own union hall. On August 17, 1880, a fire destroyed several prominent structures in downtown Eureka, NV, including the Odd Fellows Hall, the theater, and the International Hotel. Where the Odd Fellows Hall was consumed by flames, a new theater was constructed – the Eureka Opera House. The new theatre and performance hall was built to be fireproof with masonry walls about two feet thick, with a slate roof, and iron façade. A horseshoe shaped balcony overlooks the stage. The first event held at the new Opera House was a New Year’s costume ball held on December 31, 1880. The Opera House hosted top musical and dramatic guests of the late 19th century, including the "Swedish Nightingale" Jenny Lind and Frank Boothe. The first silent motion picture was shown at the Opera House in 1915. As motion pictures became the public fancy, the Opera House was converted into a movie theater in the 1920s. The last movie was screened at the Opera House in 1958. The structure fell into disrepair, and was not being used when it was added to the National Register of Historic Places on April 13, 1973 as part of the Nevada Historic District. Eureka County acquired the Opera House and a big restoration project began in 1990. The restored Eureka Opera House opened again on October 5, 1993. It is only one of two Opera Houses in Nevada still operating (the other is Piper’s Opera House in Virginia City, NV). The Eureka Opera House in Eureka, NV is available for rent for conventions, meetings, and performances, with a balance of historic features and modern conveniences.

Side note: The Eureka County website indicates that the Odd Fellows Hall was destroyed in the great main street fire in August 1879, but newspaper accounts include the Odd Fellows building among those lost in the big fire of August 1880. Other publications use the August 1879 date, too, including Nevada Magazine, but the big fires in Eureka occurred in April 1879 and August 1880. The big fire in 1879 occurred on April 18, 1879, and newspaper accounts in April 1879 do not mention the demise of the Odd Fellows Hall. It is amazing that they were able to build the Opera House enough to function for a New Year’s Eve party in just over three months in 1880 in central Nevada.

TRIVIA QUESTION OF THE DAY

Who am I? I was the chairman of a Nevada political party, and I was the prime mover behind a new industry in Nevada.

Friday's winner: Assemblyman Elliot Anderson

The question: This is the 10th anniversary of an amended pact that is critical in Nevada history. The original accord was signed between two bitter enemies in 1989. What was the agreement, and what did the 2005 amendment do?

The answer: RJ/SUN JOA, SUN inside RJ

MOVIE TRIVIA QUESTION OF THE WEEK

Reno lobbyist Scott Gilles was first on this one: Name the actor and the movies: He played a father who loses a child in a foreign land; he plays a guy who loses a wife and child; he played a guy pretending to be another guy; he played a minor character whose name is in the title of the movie. Matt Damon in "Syriana," "Contagion," "The Talented Mr. Ripley" and "Saving Private Ryan."

Boyd Briefs: February 4, 2016

From Dean Dan

Please join me in congratulating Professor Rachel Anderson on her role in helping plan the National Bar Association's (NBA) Judicial Council & Mid-Winter Meeting held Jan 12-17 in Las Vegas. As president of the NBA's Las Vegas Chapter, Professor Anderson and members of the local chapter hosted the association's distinguished guests, including judges, attorneys, educators and students, from around the nation.

The William S. Boyd School of Law was honored to be a sponsor and host a welcome reception at the Barrick Museum. Special thanks go to the following Boyd staff for their support and contributions to the success of the event: Vice Dean Ngai Pindell, Associate Dean Christine Smith, Nakia Jackson-Hale, Rachael Adair, and Sandra Rodriguez.

Among the many highlights, Judge Johnnie B. Rawlinson, U.S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, was honored with the Judicial Council Chair's Award and the National Bar Association Lifetime Achievement Award. Justice Michael Douglas, Supreme Court of Nevada, was also honored with the National Bar Association Lifetime Achievement Award, as well as the Judicial Council Leon A. Higgenbotham Award.

FACULTY SPOTLIGHT: Christopher L. Blakesley

Christopher L. Blakesley is the Cobeaga Law Firm Professor of Law at Boyd. Renowned as a scholar in international and comparative law, Professor Blakesley was a legal advisor in the U.S. Department of State under Henry Kissinger. He is a Barrick Distinguished Scholar, a member of the American Law Institute, and the author of numerous articles and books on topics ranging from terrorism to comparative criminal and family law.

How has your reading inspired your work? Poetry inspires my work. Take "Epitaph of a Tyrant" by W.H. Auden:

Perfection, of a kind, was what he was after,
And the poetry he invented was easy to understand;
He knew human folly like the back of his hand,
And was greatly interested in armies and fleets;
When he laughed, respectable senators burst with laughter, And when he cried the little children died in the streets.

This resonates. I use poetry's ethos and pathos for inspiration, to inspire, teach and write -- to stimulate empathy for victims of our too common inhumanity to each other. Tyranny is ancient and current. Auden's poem echoes my personal pain caused by actions by some within my own cultural-religious heritage. Poetry helps me to feel and impart our common value as human beings and to try to mitigate suffering by teaching, writing, and serving with compassion, empathy, understanding, love, and joy.

Which of your recent articles should I read? Law, Language, Crime, and Culture: The Value and Risks of Comparative Law, 49 Crim. L. Bull. 438 (2013) illustrates much about me -- it shows why I teach, write, and serve. I ruminate on the impact of culture, language, and literature on law, life, thinking, feeling, and learning. It is something of a jurisprudential reflection on crime and punishment, using many historical and literary references to bring out the ethos, pathos, and logos of life and the law. Law is like a language -- a culture. Studying "comparative law" is not some academic field trip or intellectual luxury. Rather, it is an engine for creating a deeper understanding of our own legal system -- of our own being. The article is a precursor to a book, an intellectual memoire.

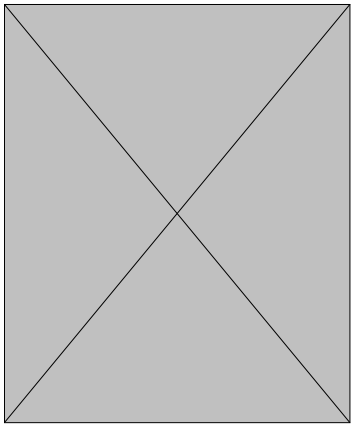
What are you working on right now? One of my books in progress is tentatively titled THEORIES OF THE WAR POWER AND THE "WAR AGAINST TERROR": A CRITIQUE (with Boyd Professor Tom McAffee). Another is COMPARATIVE LAW, LANGUAGE, CULTURE (projected 2017 or 2018). The latter is an elaboration and expansion of the article noted above. "Comparative law," language, and culture are intellectual activities -- verbs -- that can be useful in revealing the "instinctive and deepest moral values" innate in us. I am fascinated by language, culture, poetry, fiction, and law, which I use in the book to provide insight into law, literature, language, culture, and into my and the reader's personhood. I hope it will be an intellectual memoire for my children, grandchildren, and others.



STUDENT SPOTLIGHT: Elias Askins

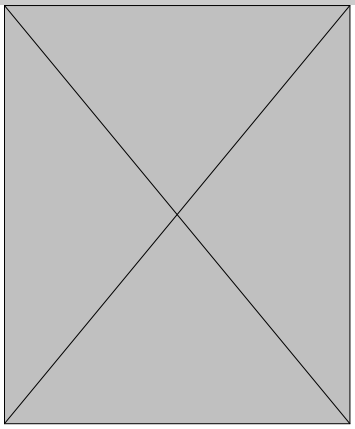
Tell us a little about growing up in Plaquemine, La. Growing up in southern Louisiana was much like growing up in any rural town. Only this rural town is on the banks of the Mississippi. There are a few highlights that stand out: playing with my cousins, road trips to the big cities of Baton Rouge and New Orleans, and fishing of course. But what was best about growing up in Plaquemine was the food! Everyone cooks!

A good part of your early years was spent working with college student-athletes. How did you enjoy that? My work as the NCAA Eligibility Coordinator in the University of Tennessee system was a great experience. Yes, it was trying at times when faced with telling a coach that one of the starters had to sit out. But overall, everyone (students, coaches, administration) worked well together. Watching some of those student-athletes go on to successful pro careers serves as a great reminder of that experience.

You've worked for the United States Department of Agriculture in Georgia and now in Las Vegas. What kind of work do you do? Usually, when I mention I work for the USDA, I'm asked "Do you grade eggs, or meat?" Actually, I'm a Rural Development Specialist in the Rural Housing Service (USDA, RDS, RHS) -- it's an alphabet soup that boils down to being a mortgage officer. We assist individuals as well as entire communities.

After four years of full-time work and law study by evening, you graduate in May. What are your plans thereafter? First, practice, practice, practice for the bar exam! Beyond that, I hope to continue working with a federal agency, but in a new capacity as legal counsel. I'm making contacts with a few agencies in preparation for that next step.

ALUMNI SPOTLIGHT: Kevin Remus '10



Kevin Remus '10 is the in-house intellectual property attorney for National Security Technologies, based in Las Vegas.

Tell us more about your position and how long have you been with them? National Security Technologies is the company that manages the Nevada National Security Site for the United States Department of Energy. I started there in the summer of 2012. Since 2013, I have also been a JAG in the Nevada Army National Guard.

What drew you to National Security Technologies, and what do you like about working there? When I was working in San Diego at a small patent prosecution firm, Assistant Dean of External Relations Layke Martin called me and told me about an opportunity with National Security Technologies. As a former Active Duty Army Officer, it sounded interesting because of the work that National Security Technologies does in the national security field. During my interview, the general counsel told me that I would have an opportunity to be the attorney who handled all intellectual property matters for the company and to work closely with the scientists and engineers who do research at the company's facilities in Las Vegas, California, New Mexico, Maryland, and at the Nevada National Security Site.

How does serving as a JAG in the Nevada National Guard help or complicate your career as an attorney? As the senior-ranking JAG in my unit, I am able to practice all aspects of military law. I also manage and lead two attorneys and two paralegals in the unit. I joined the military when I went to West Point in 1994, and I enjoy continuing to serve, but it does present complications. I am leaving my civilian job for the next 11 months to deploy to Kuwait. My job is protected under federal law and my employer is very supportive, but I know the other attorneys in my office will have to pick up my job duties. However, I am almost at my military retirement, so this should be my final deployment.

DAYS UNTIL NEVADA DEMOCRATIC PRESIDENTIAL CAUCUS: 178

DAYS UNTIL 2020 GENERAL ELECTION: 433

Good morning, everyone. Another week of candidates visits to the #WeMatter State this week, with Cory Booker, Amy Klobuchar, Kamala Harris and Julian Castro already here. It's a big day for the local AFL-CIO chapter – I spent some time Tuesday over at the Flamingo Hotel, where labor leaders seemed quite excited about presidential candidates coming to visit today. It's only going to get more intense, the visits more frequent.

What's below: Dis-Knechting McDonald, 2020 nuggets, Morning Flash nuggets and a trivia question about an important man in Nevada and national history.

COMING UP

I'll be on MSNBC shortly after 8:30 a.m. on the best coast. You should watch.

THE DIS-KNECHT CAMPAIGN CONTINUES

Ron Knecht, the former controller and former assemblyman who thinks he should rule the world, now wants to be vice-chairman of the state GOP, a step down for one with so many degrees and so much greatness. He has now penned the second (and more are coming) column saying why Michael McDonald must be ousted in favor of his ticket, headed by Annie Black.

No link yet, but I can tell you the column paints a picture of a lack of financial accountability at the party headed by a man who set up a private slush fund and fooled GOP donors into giving to it. You don't say!

To wit:

"We were promised a real budget and proper management procedures in the future. In the party treasurer's latest monthly report, there were still no meaningful budget entries, and so most variance amounts in spending were 100 percent. No sound management procedures are in place. On this front and others, the incumbents are not even trying to make any progress toward openness, transparency and accountability.

"The state party is not operating according to its own bylaws, nor under standard business procedures needed to be accountable to Republicans and the public. Instead, it is run out of the vest pocket of Chairman Michael McDonald, with the other incumbents being a rubber stamp, despite extensive protests of serious and competent people who work hard for the party."

The Trump campaign thinks it can control McDonald and thus supports him and hopes to use the party, a la Harry Reid, as a legalized money laundering operation. If McDonald stays, they will be the guys in Kansas City in "Goodfellas" wondering what's happening to their money in Vegas….

A COUPLE OF 2020 NUGGETS

Nugget No. 1 – Las Vegas Councilman Stavros Anthony, his mayoral dreams dashed, is running for Larry Brown's open County Commission seat and has quite the list for his first money event next month at Marche Bacchus. It's basically a GOP donors who's who along with local lobbyists and some guy named "Mark Hutchinson (sic)." Big question is whether former SOS Ross Miller gets into the race. Others will, too, I'd guess, and it is a Dem district.

Nugget No. 2 – Pro-American, third-person Jim is going to be tough to beat.

A COUPLE OF MORNING FLASH NUGGETS

Nugget No. 1 – Gaming numbers out today: Up almost 3 percent over July of last year. Almost all Clark carrying the state – the South was up 2.5 percent. Strip up 1.5 percent, downtown up 7.5 percent. Washoe up just under 1 percent.

Nugget No. 2 – Boulder City is safe.

TRIVIA QUESTION OF THE DAY

A Mississippi man was born on this day who would later move to Nevada where he would hold two different offices and become a national figure for whom major pieces of legislation were named. Who?

Tuesday's winner: No one

The question: A gaming pioneer is associated with this entity. On this date in history, a foundation made a game-changing grant to UNLV, which created a new entity at UNLV. What was it?

The answer: Lincy Foundation gave $14 mil to create the Lincy Institute

Minnesota will urge the U.S. Supreme Court to overturn the Eighth Circuit's recent ruling that nixed portions of a state law effectively barring new coal-fired plants from supplying electricity to the state, Law360 learned on Friday.

FCC Chairman Pushes Carriers To Help Block Robocalls

The commissioner of the Federal Communications Commission on Friday called on major wireless and landline phone companies to offer free call-blocking services to customers in an effort to combat robocalls, the “number one source of complaints” at the FCC, the commissioner said.

La. Abortion Laws Delayed Until At Least November

A Louisiana federal judge on Friday pushed back hearings in a case challenging the state's seven abortion laws enacted in 2016 until November, and during that time the state has agreed to hold off on enforcing the laws, according to the Center for Reproductive Rights.

Pols Want New Whistleblower Protections For Contractors

A bipartisan group of House members introduced a bill Thursday that would extend existing federal whistleblower protections to federal contractors, as pressure has built on the U.S. departments of Defense, Veterans Affairs and other federal agencies over their treatment of whistleblowers.

With the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Food Safety and Inspection Service's announcement of its plan to share more food safety data regarding slaughter and processing facilities, it seems clear that the agency hopes such publicity will provide additional stimulus for a race to the top in the area of pathogen reduction, say Robert Hibbert and Hilary Lewis at Morgan Lewis & Bockius LLP.

PROMESA Shields Puerto Rico Behind A New Automatic Stay

Tucked at the end of the Puerto Rico Oversight, Management, and Economic Stability Act is a stand-alone provision that promises an immediate impact not merely on bondholders and other creditors seeking to enforce payment and remedies, but on any person or entity seeking to enforce rights generally against the government of Puerto Rico or any "territorial instrumentality," says Michael Cooley of Bryan Cave LLP.

TOP NEWS

Fed, FDIC Give Small Foreign Banks Living Will Leeway

The Federal Reserve and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. said Friday that foreign banks with limited activities in the U.S. would be able to file shorter versions of their living wills for the next three years.

Looming Brexit Vote Casts Uncertainty Over London IPOs

After a hot start to the year, initial public offerings in London have cooled amid uncertainty surrounding the coming “Brexit” referendum. While deals are gaining steam elsewhere in Europe, U.K. capital markets lawyers are crossing their fingers that activity will restart in London following the vote.

Patent Trolls May Want To Think Twice About Rhode Island

So-called patent trolls may soon find Rhode Island an inhospitable place to hatch their infringement claims, after the state's General Assembly passed legislation Thursday to ban the zealous patent rights enforcers and put them at the business end of antitrust actions.

NLRB Election Rule Survives 5th Circ. Challenge

The Fifth Circuit on Friday upheld the National Labor Relations Board’s rule streamlining the union election process, saying that the rule comports with federal labor law and that the board was within its bounds to create it.

Senate Moves On $602B Defense Bill Amid Flak From Dems

The U.S. Senate voted Friday to move forward with its $602 billion National Defense Authorization Act over the vocal objections of a number of Democrats, setting up a final vote on the bill for next week.

Pa. State Sen. Pleads Not Guilty To Buying Votes

A Pennsylvania state senator and a member of the Democratic Committee for Philadelphia’s Eighth Ward pled not guilty in federal court Friday to an indictment that accuses the lawmaker of buying support in a 2011 election to become the party's ward leader, according to their attorneys.

Here, Law360 takes a look at three hot-button water issues facing the Lone Star State.

11th Circ. Could Expose Doctors To Greater Speech Limits

Doctors fighting a Florida law that restricts their ability to ask questions about patients' gun ownership will make their final pitch to the Eleventh Circuit later this month in a case that some fear could provide an open door for politicians to tread on the speech rights of physicians and potentially other regulated professionals, such as attorneys.

BANKING & SECURITIES

EU Adopts Derivatives Rules For Non-Eurozone Currencies

The European Commission said Friday it has adopted new rules that require certain over-the-counter credit derivative contracts denominated in three non-eurozone currencies to be cleared through central counterparties, part of a wider effort to boost market transparency following the financial crisis.

CFTC Floats Position-Limit Changes for Derivatives Policy

The Commodity Futures Trading Commission is proposing a supplemental rule on position limits for derivatives that revises regulations proposed in 2013 to help ensure that commercial end-users can continue to engage in “bona fide” hedging efficiently for risk management and price discovery.

Industry Warns CFTC Against Broad Algorithmic Trading Rules

Market participants told the Commodity Futures Trading Commission at a Friday roundtable that proposed rules to regulate automated and algorithmic trading are too broad, while the agency appeared to have considered claims the regulations could compromise firms’ valuable source code.

ENERGY & ENVIRONMENTAL

House Slams $10-Per-Barrel Oil Fee, Carbon Tax Ideas

The U.S. House of Representatives voted Friday to spell out its opposition to two ideas that have been floated to improve the environment: a national carbon tax and the Obama administration’s proposal for a $10-per-barrel fee on crude oil.

House Dems Praise Calif. AG's Exxon Climate Change Probe

A group of California congressional Democrats on Thursday urged the state’s attorney general to continue an investigation into whether fossil fuel companies like Exxon Mobil Corp. misled investors and the public on the impact of climate change, in spite of resistance from House Republicans.

HEALTH & LIFE SCIENCES

Doctors Challenge California's New 'Right To Die' Law

Several doctors and a medical ethics association have filed a lawsuit in state court to strike a California law that took effect on Thursday that allows terminally ill adults to receive prescription drugs to end their lives, arguing that it raises constitutional concerns over the medical standard of care.

TRANSPORTATION & INFRASTRUCTURE

DOT Gives 6 Airlines Cuba-US Flight Approval

The U.S. Department of Transportation will allow six domestic airlines to establish flights between the United States and Cuba in the fall as part of President Barack Obama's ongoing attempts to normalize relations with the Caribbean country, the DOT announced on Friday.

Calif. Court Nixes CARB Loosening Of Diesel Emissions Rule

The California Air Resources Board on Tuesday lost its grip on a number of exceptions to a rule forcing diesel trucks and buses to cut emissions that allowed smaller fleets more time and flexibility with the requirements, when a state court found the delay is unfair to other compliant trucks.

NJ Lawmakers Unveil $20B Plan To Boost Transportation Aid

New Jersey lawmakers on Friday unveiled two different versions of a 10-year, $20 billion plan to replenish the state's dwindling Transportation Trust Fund through fuel tax hikes, offset by tax breaks for low income workers, retirees and estate heirs.

FAA Pushes For Mental Health Reporting Rather Than Testing

The U.S. Department of Transportation's Federal Aviation Administration announced Thursday it would encourage commercial airline pilots to report mental health issues instead of requiring them to undergo routine psychological testing.

INSURANCE

Dutch State Sells Stake In Insurer ASR Through $1.1B IPO

State-owned Dutch insurer ASR Nederland NV raised €1 billion ($1.1 billion) in an initial public offering on Friday as the government begins unloading shares in the company whose parent it rescued during the financial crisis, marking the latest IPO in Netherlands' busy capital markets.

REAL ESTATE

NC Justices Say State Must Pay In Road Project Takings Fight

North Carolina's high court ruled Friday the state must pay Winston-Salem landowners who for decades were barred from developing their properties under a state law carving out potential future highway projects, saying the restrictions represented an unconstitutional taking of residents' property without just compensation.

EMPLOYMENT

DOL Says States Haven't Justified Blocking Persuader Rule

The U.S. Department of Labor urged a Texas federal judge Thursday to reject an attempt by various states to block its so-called persuader rule, arguing the group hasn't satisfied the requirements that would warrant that sort of emergency relief.

NLRB Flips Rule On Mixed-Guard Unit Recognition

The National Labor Relations Board reversed Thursday its long-standing precedent of letting employers unilaterally withdraw recognition of bargaining units that include security guards after the collective bargaining agreement expires, now requiring employers to honor their voluntary recognition so long as the union

4th. Circ Won't Stay Trans Bathroom Ruling During Appeal

The Fourth Circuit on Thursday said it wouldn't stay its ruling that, under Title IX of the education code, schools must let transgender students use the bathroom that fits their gender identity, while a Virginia school board appeals the decision to the U.S. Supreme Court.

Ohio School Board Sues Over Trans Bathroom Directive

An Ohio school board on Friday sued the U.S. Department of Justice and U.S. Department of Education for requiring public schools to let transgender students use the bathrooms, lockers and other facilities that match the students' gender identity or to otherwise risk losing federal funding.

GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS

GAO Wants Navy Funding Blocked To Force Frigate Plan Fix

The U.S. Navy needs to address "fundamental weaknesses" in its multibillion-dollar littoral combat ship and related frigate procurement programs, the U.S. Government Accountability Office said on Thursday, suggesting that Congress deny funding for the programs while the Navy revises its strategy.

Pa. AG Won't Appeal Time-Barred Charges Against Mayor

The Pennsylvania attorney general's office announced Friday it will not appeal an order dismissing more than 300 expired criminal charges against former Harrisburg Mayor Stephen R. Reed for allegedly diverting funds away from a municipal incinerator project to purchase artifacts and other memorabilia, noting that 144 charges remain.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

EU Deepens Trade Engagement With Southern African Nations

The European Union signed an economic partnership agreement Friday with a group of six countries in southern Africa that is aimed at spurring development in the region and promoting trade.

India Nearing Compliance In WTO Poultry Dispute

The Indian government has informed the World Trade Organization that it has circulated draft revisions to its food safety rules in order to comply with an adverse decision that said the measures were unfairly restricting imports of U.S. poultry products, according to WTO documents circulated Friday.

GOP Rep. Predicts TPP Vote Will Slip To Next Administration

Former Ways and Means Subcommittee on Trade Chairman Devin Nunes, R-Calif., on Thursday predicted that a congressional vote to ratify the Trans-Pacific Partnership will not be held until after President Barack Obama leaves office, citing lawmakers' widespread skepticism about the deal.

Ex-U.S. Rep. To Lead BakerHostetler's Federal Policy Team

BakerHostetler has added former U.S. Rep. Michael Ferguson and two employees of his consultant group to its Washington, D.C., office, where they’ll work as advisers in the firm’s federal policy group under Ferguson’s leadership, the firm has announced.

EXPERT ANALYSIS

In Congress: FOIA, Fiscal Year 2017, Preventing IRS Abuse

Consideration of fiscal year 2017 appropriations measures remains at the top of the agenda in both chambers this week. All eyes will be on the House floor, as debate over the U.S. Department of Defense spending bill could make or break the entire appropriations process moving forward, say Richard Hertling and Kaitlyn McClure of Covington & Burling LLP.

In Defense Of The Bid Protest Process

The House and Senate proposals for bid protest reform are based on misperceptions and overblown concerns about the prevalence of “frivolous” protests and prolonged procurement delays. Moreover, the proposals strongly suggest that the essential benefits of the bid protest process still are not fully appreciated, says Aron Beezley of Bradley Arant Boult Cummings LLP.

Philanthropic Capital In Search Of Clarity

The slow rate of change at the IRS hampers the deployment of philanthropic capital. Recently effective regulations illustrating investments that qualify as program-related investments, for example, have an overweighted emphasis on international philanthropy — a trend from over a decade ago, says Michael Cooney of Nixon Peabody LLP.

LEGAL INDUSTRY

Attys Don't Have Trump's Leeway On Judicial Criticism: Prof

Donald Trump may be able to get away with criticizing a federal judge, but whether a lawyer can do so depends on a few factors, including the tone and context of the criticism, according to a Stetson University law professor.

Int'l Law Firm CMS' Revenue Breaks Through €1B Barrier

US House Votes To Intervene In Puerto Rico Debt Crisis

The U.S. House of Representatives passed a bill on Thursday to put an oversight board in charge of alleviating Puerto Rico's debt crisis through fiscal supervision and restructuring, leaving the onus on the Senate to pass what some representatives called the territory's only hope for recovery.

Fla. Judge Faces Suspension Over Misleading Campaign Ads

A Florida judicial oversight panel on Thursday recommended a three-month suspension for a state judge charged with using misleading campaign materials in her 2014 judicial campaign, saying the judge's behavior was "offensive and disturbing."

More Obstacles To Judicial Retirement Vote, Pa. Court Warns

The Pennsylvania Commonwealth Court on Thursday said that the partisan fight over the wording and timing of a ballot question to raise the state's mandatory judicial retirement age to 75 could lead to the measure — already delayed once — being bumped off the November ballot.

NJ High Court Backs Christie On Nixing Pension COLAs

New Jersey isn't bound to make cost-of-living adjustments to the pensions of retired public workers after the state Supreme Court on Thursday ruled in favor of Gov. Chris Christie and found that retirees challenging a suspension of those increases couldn't show they had a contractual right to receive them.

NY Lawmakers Eye Proposed Prosecutorial Conduct Panel

A proposed New York bill seeking to set up a prosecutorial conduct commission similar to one overseeing judges will have a "chilling effect" on prosecutors, one district attorney told legislators at a Wednesday hearing evaluating the bill.

NJ Lawmakers Back Tenure For Recently-Disciplined Judge

The New Jersey Senate Judiciary Committee voted Thursday to give tenure to a Superior Court judge who was disciplined for making inappropriate comments to prosecutors and a witness, in a unanimous decision that followed the jurist's repeated expressions of remorse to the lawmakers.

DOJ's Gelfand Helped Boost Antitrust Trial Readiness

Deputy Assistant Attorney General David Gelfand, who is departing from the U.S. Department of Justice's Antitrust Division after leading its litigation efforts for three years, leaves behind an enforcement team that is better prepared and more willing to take cases to trial, former colleagues said.

FCC Unfazed By Bipartisan Pushback On Set-Top Box Plan

Federal Communications Commission Chairman Tom Wheeler will likely stay the course on his plan to unlock the TV set-top box until his tenure ends, experts say, even though the proposal has drawn unusual bipartisan resistance in Congress and has riled industry groups who claim it could undermine pay-TV programming.

Future Of US-China Trade In Flux As Obama's Term Nears End

This week's conclusion of the U.S.-China Strategic and Economic Dialogue marks the twilight of high-level engagement between the two trading powers under the Obama administration, leaving experts with questions about how best to tackle thorny policy squabbles with Beijing in the coming years.

EXPERT ANALYSIS

EB-5 Reform: What To Expect After SEC Jay Peak Enforcement

The U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission's recent enforcement action against Jay Peak, a ski resort in Vermont, underscores the need for reform to the EB-5 program. As the EB-5 market continues to evolve and mature we should expect Congress to finally implement reforms such as larger investment requirements and greater integrity measures, say attorneys at Fox Rothschild LLP.

NYC Human Rights Law: 'Equal Opportunity' Offender

The current New York City Human Rights Law standards and burdens continue to confuse state and federal courts in the Second Circuit. It is time for the court of appeals to clarify NYCHRL legal standards and burdens, for neither the courts nor litigants are well served by the current state of affairs, say Barry Asen and Kristopher Reichardt at Epstein Becker Green PC.

ACA Risk Corridor Funding Falls Short, Litigation Ensues

The decision by health insurers to litigate Affordable Care Act risk corridor funding shortfalls and the import of the recent Burwell decision in D.C. federal court are best understood in the context of the broader political struggle concerning ACA implementation, which continues to create uncertainty and risk for participating health plans, say attorneys at Butler Rubin Saltarelli & Boyd LLP.

Navigating FDA's New Nutrition And Supplement Fact Rules

The U.S. Food and Drug Administration's recent overhaul of its rules governing nutrition labeling for foods and dietary supplements will require significant company compliance efforts in the near term and could expose businesses to litigation risk. Attorneys at Venable LLP assess the impact of the new rules and explain how companies can adhere to the new requirements and manage risk.

In-House Teams Are Voting With Their Feet — And Then Some

The real threat to law firms comes from in-house legal departments, which have increased in size, prestige, management responsibility, and attractiveness to top legal talent. But it’s not just labor arbitrage that accounts for the shift from outsourcing work to doing it in-house, says Mark A. Cohen, founder of Legal Mosaic LLC.

LEGAL INDUSTRY

How To Become An Attorney GCs Fear

Being a top-notch litigator means you don't want to be loved — you want to be feared. But how do you become that lawyer who sends shivers down the spines of general counsels? Here, Law360 talks to attorneys about three things you can do to become a litigator who scares opposing GCs.

Sidley, Latham, 30 Others Hop On The $180K Train

As of Thursday evening, more than 30 more firms have embraced an associate pay scale starting at $180,000 a year, including a nearly worldwide raise at Latham & Watkins LLP and pay bumps at Sidley Austin LLP, Kirkland & Ellis LLP and others.

Cravath's $180K Raise May Deepen Legal Industry Divide

As more elite law firms jump on the $180,000 starting salary bandwagon led by Cravath Swaine & Moore LLP, experts say the already stratified legal industry will likely begin to see an even starker divide when it comes to recruiting top talent and securing high-paying legal work.

Law360's Weekly Verdict: Legal Lions & Lambs

Associates at Cravath Swaine & Moore earned a spot among the legal lions this week, nabbing a salary upgrade that's set a new standard for blue-chip law firms, while a former Merck in-house attorney landed the drugmaker and its legal team among the lambs after a judge cited his extensive and Merck-condoned misconduct in scrapping a $200 million verdict in its favor.

Post Trump, NY Bar Chief Calls Attacks On Judges Improper

The president of the New York Bar Association spoke out Thursday against personal attacks on judges in a response to Donald Trump's disparaging comments about a California federal judge, although she did not mention the Republican presidential candidate by name.

Compliance Problems Climb With Companies' Rate Of Change

Compliance shortfalls increase at companies that have experienced organizational change such as expansions, mergers or turnover in the leadership ranks, according to a new business ethics survey of workers in 13 countries.

Justices Give Practical Fix To Rare Problem Of Jury Recalls

The U.S. Supreme Court's decision empowering federal district courts to recall discharged civil juries if verdict errors are discovered could save parties the trouble and expense of a retrial, but in such rare instances, the potential for returning jurors to be biased by outsiders could have an enormous impact on the case, experts say.

Barclays May Demand Rebates From More Outside Law Firms

British banking giant Barclays has said that it plans to expand its program dictating how much outside law firms are paid and how much they must rebate the bank if they fail to hit certain work level targets, it was reported on Wednesday.

Last Week Senator Harris Toured CA Sites Impacted by Trump Budget

Friend -

Senator Harris spent the Memorial Day state work period last week visiting key sites in California impacted by President Trump's budget and the GOP Health care bill.

On Wednesday, Senator Harris, a member of the Senate Budget Committee and the Senate Committee on Environment and Public Works, met with officials at the Port of Los Angeles. Harris was briefed by officials on the national and regional impact of the Port. The Trump Administration's proposed budget includes damaging cuts to transportation, goods movement, and workforce development. Harris also toured part of the Port. The Port of Los Angeles is the nation's largest and busiest container port. It creates nearly 500,000 jobs within local counties and 1.5 million jobs nationwide. President Trump's proposed budget would cut key programs it depends on, including workforce training programs, infrastructure development grants, and port security. As a member of the Senate Committee on Environment and Public Works, Harris sent a letter of support to U.S. Department of Transportation Secretary Elaine Chao for America's Global Freight Gateway: Southern California Rail Project to secure a grant under the Department of Transportation's Fostering Advancements in Shipping and Transportation for the Long-term Achievement of National Efficiencies (FASTLANE) program. This project will remove freight bottlenecks to the Port of Los Angeles and Long Beach, which are the first and second busiest container ports in the nation.

On Thursday, Senator Harris met with patients and physicians at the Martin Luther King, Jr. Outpatient Center in Los Angeles. At the clinic, Harris was briefed on the Center's critical role in providing substance abuse treatment, including opioid addiction, to patients in Los Angeles, many of whom are covered by Medicaid. The GOP health care bill cut more than $800 billion from Medicaid. The President's proposed budget would cut up to an additional $616 billion from Medicaid. Additionally, the GOP health care bill would result in 14 million Americans losing health care coverage next year. The Center for Disease Control estimates that more than 4,600 Californians die each year from opioid overdoses, including heroin, and that number is expected to rise. Medicaid is the largest payer for opioid treatment, and both the GOP health care plan and Trump's proposed budget would potentially make substance abuse treatment more expensive or completely unaffordable for millions of Americans. Previously at the Center for American Progress Ideas Conference, Harris spoke out against U.S. Attorney General Jeff Session's revival of the War on Drugs and outlined how we can effectively treat the current opioid epidemic. Harris urged policymakers to treat addiction as a public health issue and to fight "not a War on Drugs but a War on Drug Addiction."

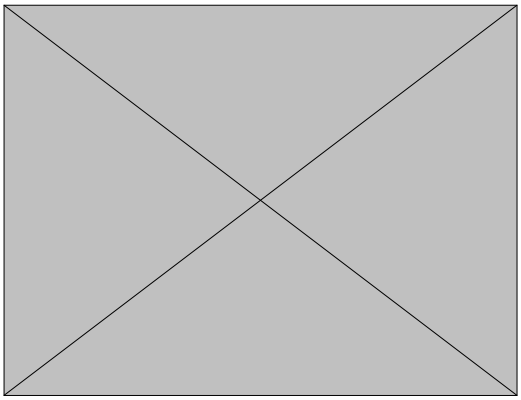
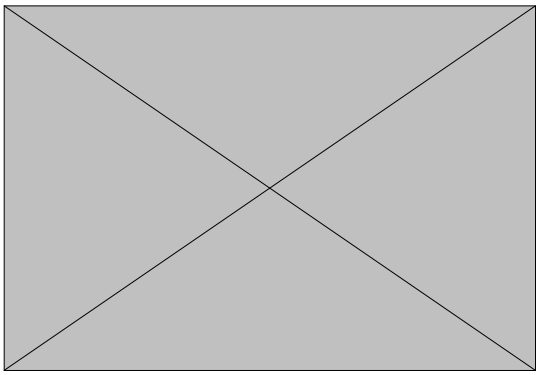
The Senator also met with Navy officials at U.S. Naval Base Coronado on Friday, where she toured the U.S.S. Theodore Roosevelt and visited the Navy SEALs at the Naval Special Warfare Command and training center.





On the U.S.S. Theodore Roosevelt, Harris received a briefing on the ship's capabilities, as well as the scope of Third Fleet operations in the Pacific and the role of the Carrier Strike Group. At the Naval Special Warfare Command, Harris was given an overview of Navy SEAL operations and capabilities, and their unique role in U.S. Special Operation Forces. Harris expressed her deep gratitude to all sailors and SEALs for the sacrifices of the men and women of the Navy, including fallen Navy SEAL, Special Warfare Operator First Class Remington Peters, who was memorialized at the base on Friday. The Navy is on the front lines of defending U.S. interests by sea and land. It is also a critical part of the San Diego community and economy, and the three naval bases in the region are responsible for roughly 300,000 jobs. The Navy, and its ability to operate in San Diego and Coronado, plays an essential role in our nation's security, domestically and around the world.

Amazing my one-liner response justified this lengthy litany of his perspectives.
Two things (actually 3) since he's thinking himself king and thus is most judgmental:

1. "acknowledgement" should be acknowledgment
2. Hasn't he studied enough history to realize we (the historical "we") are all immigrants and probably most were church-mouse poor at one point?
3. who made him king?
4. Should we answer or not?

Mayor Goodman,
Thank you for your acknowledgement. Please read my summary of "Adios America" below.
Also, because some people are more influenced by feelings than facts, I thought you might be interested in my summary of this NYT book review, "Against Empathy: The Case for Rational Compassion" by Paul Bloom:
"Empathy, he argues, is a poor moral guide.... favouring the one over the many... empathy is untampered by reason, emanating from the murky bayou of the gut. He prefers a kind of rational compassion - a mixture of caring and detached cost-benefit analysis. ... To those who say empathy is essential to morality, he would reply that morality has many sources. Many 'wrongs' - like littering or cheating on your taxes - have no distinct victims to empathise with. Nor does it appear that the most empathetic people behave the most ethically. There have been hundreds of studies... the results are 'meh'. ... empathy is generally a bad tool to use for allocating resources. ... is part of the reason why governments and individuals care more about a little girl stuck in a well than about events that will affect millions. Consider parenting... almost all parents have a terrible time tolerating the discomfort of their children. Yet it's often essential (going to the dentist, doing homework, spending a night away from home). ...rationality in political domains often does seem to be in short supply."

"Adios, America!" by Ann Coulter. Excerpts below:

1. For forty years, the people have tried to tell politicians they want less immigration, but the politicians won't listen. Every single elite group in America is aligned against the public - the media, ethnic activists, big campaign donors, Wall Street, multimillionaire farmers, and liberal "churches." They all want mass immigration from the Third World to continue. Both political parties connive to grant illegal aliens citizenship and bring in millions more legally, and the media hide the evidence. ... How immigration is changing our country is a lot more important than most of the "news" we hear about endlessly. The media will pound away at Chris Christie's 'Bridge gate', apocryphal fraternity rapes, the Augusta National Golf Club's membership policies, 'white privilege... But getting the truth about immigration is nearly impossible. The media tell us: ... Immigrants are doing the jobs Americans just won't do: Americans are perfectly happy to do all manner of jobs - they just won't do them for $7.00 an hour. Unions used to care about that, but now they just want political power.... Amnesty will be Fantastic for the Economy: Unless we're talking about the Mexican economy, this is patently ridiculous. Adding another 30 million poor, unskilled, non-taxpaying, welfare-receiving people to America is good only for government workers and employers who refuse to mechanize their operations or pay Americans one dollar more. ... The problems stemming from unchecked immigration are all over the news. You'll just never be told they are problems of immigration - children living in poverty, childhood obesity, teen pregnancy, out-of-wedlock births, abysmal high school dropout rates, income inequality, 'homegrown' terrorists, massive Medicare frauds, internet crime, identity theft, prison overcrowding, the vast number of uninsured used to justify Obamacare, sex trafficking, the epidemic of child rape, the destruction of our national parks, drunk driving casualties, drug-resistant tuberculosis, measles and other viral outbreaks, bankrupt government pension, low reading and math scores and shorter 'Americans'. ... why is it a crisis that illegal aliens are 'living in the shadows'?... It's supposed to be uncomfortable to break the law. ... How did all those illegal aliens get into the shadows in the first place? They weren't kidnapped and dragged across the border... But 'living in the shadows' is evidently better than living in Guadalajara, otherwise, there's an easy solution. Democrats aren't big on amnestying other lawbreakers. they don't hysterically demand amnesty for accounting cheats or polluters - not even for "the children" of accounting cheats and polluters. Enron executives were hard workers. They loved their families and wanted the best for them, just I'm sure MS-13 gang members love their families.... When the bathtub is overflowing, the very first thing you do is: TURN OFF THE WATER. ... obviously, any amnesty functions as a magnet for more illegal aliens. Nothing shows the bad faith of amnesty advocates with more blinding clarity than their steadfast refusal to seal the border. Ordinary people see this and know they're being lied to. ... China built a thirteen-thousand mile wall several centuries before Christ, and it's still working. ... For whom is a 'world without borders' an ideal? People who don't much care for America, I gather. ... Congress has repeatedly voted to build a border fence. But somehow, the fence never gets built - and Congress does nothing. ... amnesty supporters tried a surprise argument: To stop illegals pouring across the border, congress had to pass amnesty. They were hoping to stun us into silence with the stupidity of their argument. ... The 1986 Simpson-Mazzoli Act was supposed to end illegal immigration forever: Give us amnesty one time, then: Never again. As with all laws that combine the bitter with the sweet, such as tax hikes and spending cuts, we got one and not the other. The amnesty came, but the border security never did. Illegal immigration sextupled. There have been a half dozen more amnesties since then... . "The moral thing to do" is usually defined as "following the law." ... To paraphrase what President Bush used to say about terrorists: The anti-amnesty side has to be perfect every time; the pro-amnesty side only has to win once. Then the country is finished. 2. ... shouldn't politicians be more concerned with what citizens think of them than what foreigners do? ... Wouldn't any sane immigration policy be based on the principle that we want to bring in only immigrants who will benefit the people already here? ... Try calling another country's embassy and asking to immigrate there. Consulate: What do you want? You: Well, I can't read or write, I have no skills, and I've got nine kids. Oh and by the way. If I can't make it in your country, would you mind cutting my family a check once a month? ... Our "family reunification" policies mean that being related to a recent immigrant from Pakistan trumps being a surgeon from Denmark. Our government does such a terrific job at choosing who gets to immigrate to America that 52 percent of legal immigrant households with children are on government assistance. In all, nearly 60 percent of immigrants - legal and illegal - are on government assistance, compared with 39 percent of native households. Why would any country voluntarily bring in people who have to be supported by the taxpayer? ... The immigrants get a taxpayer subsidy to work for the rich, and the rich get a break on the maid. This cozy deal is funded by the long-suffering middle class. The anti-American crowd used to dash off to fight with Communist insurgencies in Third World jungles. But the fun of being self-righteous was sometimes cut short when they ended up in prison.... Rather than hating America from abroad, today's radicals can hate it right here at home by bringing the Third World to America! ... Being openly hostile to America has become a part of ethnic pride. US Rep Luis Gutierrez calls on his own country (technically the USA) to "stop the deportation of our people . ... Gutierrez told Newsweek that he has "only one loyalty, and that's to the immigrant community."

Whose taxes will be raised to make up the shortfall? Not the people who don't pay any taxes at all. Employers don't care. They want the cheap labor NOW.... We're seeing exactly what Vladimir Lenin is supposed to have said about capitalists: 'They will sell us the rope with which to hang them.' ... Whey shouldn't employers be on the hook when their cheap labor becomes a public charge or commits a crime? ... An immigration law premised on the idea that America owes the rest of the world would be bad enough. But Third World immigration + massive welfare state + political correctness = The end of America. 4. America is not the natural state of the world. The natural state of the world is Darfur. The British Empire spread Anglo-Saxon culture around the globe - Protestant morals, individualism, and the rule of law. Most British colonies rejected those values. Only the ones populated by actual British people -

America, Canada, Australia, and New Zealand - managed to hold on to them and, as a result, prospered. The empire's most successful experiment was the United States. Anyone who hesitates for a moment to recognize that some groups have it over other groups in producing free and prosperous nations has been brainwashed beyond reclamation.
5. America has already taken in more than one quarter of Mexico's entire population. ... Is that diverse enough yet? Why is it better that the ethnic population of our country be changed? ... Immigration of the past half century has been a homicide made to look like a suicide. ...a natural process? ... It's more like Americans are trying to stop an Army Corp of Engineers project that will flood the valley where they live in order to build a hydroelectric plant that will help one powerful corporation.
6. ... Until 1970, American immigrants did better than the natives - as any sane immigration policy would require. They made more money, bought more houses, and were more educated. By contrast, the post-1970 immigrants are far more likely to be unemployed and live in poverty that the native Americans. More that a third of the post-Kennedy act immigrants don't even have a high school diploma. ... In some bizarre notion of turn-about-is-fair-play, it is assumed that backward societies have the right to relocate to the countries of their former colonizers. I thought they hated those guys (the colonizers)? ... In just a few decades, Minnesota has gone from being approximately, 99 percent German, Dutch, Finnish, Danish, and Polish to 20 percent African immigrant, including at least one hundred thousand Somalis. And that's not counting the Somalis who have recently left the country to fight with al Queda and ISIS. One hundred thousand is just an estimate. We don't know precisely how many Somalis the federal government has brought in as "refugees" because the government won't tell us. ... Kate Towle, the parent leader of a high school group called "Students Together as Allies for Racial Trust" explained that diversity skills "have to be developed like math, history." Maybe it would be better for students to be learning math and history, rather than the important skill of getting along with Somalis. It doesn't seem to be working anyway. There are still violent ethnic brawls that send students to the hospital. What did we do to Somalis? ... absolutely nothing. But now these immigrants, who arrived yesterday, will get affirmative action over white Americans. ... Luckily, every Somali in Minnesota who has a job works for an ethnic grievance outfit - for example, the Somali Justice Advocacy Center, the Somali Resources Aid Associates, the African Development Center, and the Confederation of Somali Community in Minnesota. (And those are just some of the jobs being created by immigrants!). ... half of Somalis in Minnesota unemployed and 80 percent living at or below the poverty level... Recent mass murders committed by legal immigrants: The seven people murdered by Chechen immigrants Dzhokhar and Tamerlan Tsarnaev, who planted a bomb at the Boston Marathon, the four people fatally shot in a Carson City IHOP by... the Mexican-born Eduardo Sencion, the thirteen soldiers killed at Fort Hood by Major Nidal Malik Hasan, son of Palestinian immigrants, the thirteen people murdered by Vietnamese immigrant Jiverly Wong, at an American Civic Association in Binghamton, New York, the thirty-two people murdered at Virginia Tech by Seung-Hui Cho, a South Korean immigrant.... no one notices the immigrant crime wave because the media hide the evidence.
8. When did Americans get together and decide we want 30 percent of all immigrants to be from a single country and that country should be Mexico? If we're going to take almost all our immigrants from a single country, why not Denmark? There appears to have been only on Danish prisoner in New York State in decades - and, again, that was a Muslim. ...nearly 90 percent (of criminal aliens imprisoned in the states in 2009) were from one of eight countries: Mexico, Colombia, the Dominican Republic, Cuba, Jamaica, El Salvador, Honduras, and Guatemala. ... What other country on earth would be so stupid? We have studies showing Hispanics are underrepresented in Hollywood, at top colleges, in the federal government, and in the national media... You know where else Hispanics are underrepresented? In the US military. You'd never know it... but Hispanics are half as likely to enlist in the military as either whites or blacks. ... Hispanic males in the US are more than three times as likely to spend time in prison in their lifetimes than white males. ... The vast majority of all drugs in America - heroin, cocaine, marijuana, and increasingly, methamphetamine - are brought in from Mexico. Most of the heroin sold in the US is grown south of the border, and Mexican cartels transport nearly all of it. ... More than 40,000 Americans were killed from all illegal drug use in 2010, surpassing car accidents and shootings as a cause of death. ... Today, China is once again battling drug smuggling because like America, it also has a poor, corrupt nation with a massive humanitarian crisis on its border; Not Mexico, but North Korea. Guess what China did? It built a fence! Despite stern warnings from the New York Times, China put a thirteen-foot barbed wire fence on its border, patrolled by armed guards. And you know what, it's working! ... Is an American citizen more likely to be murdered by a Muslim terrorist or by a Mexican? According to CNN, 29 Americans have been killed in Islamic terrorist attacks in the US since 9/11. I don't know why they excluded 9/11, so by my count, it's 3,029. In fact, let's round it up to 4,000 to cover the last several decades. According to the GAO's extremely conservative figures, Mexicans alone - forget other immigrants - have murdered a minimum of 23,000 Americans in the last few decades. ... If this were happening in Israel, forget a fence - Netanyahu would be bombing Mexico. ... President

Eisenhower put a general in charge of the INS, who proceeded to round up and deport illegals in an operation dubbed "Operation Wetback." HBO's Bill Maher would be saying of our southern neighbors: "Americans have 349 Nobel Prizes; Latin Americans have 16. That seems like kind of a big advantage for Team America." ... Far more Americans are murdered by Mexicans, per capita, than Israelis are murdered by Palestinians. 11. The three young girls kidnapped and held as sex slaves for more than a decade in a boarded-up house in Cleveland had been held by Ariel Castro. ... But then it turned out Castro wasn't the only Hispanic raping young girls - on his block. ... While investigating the Castro case, detectives happened upon Acevedo... he had raped and killed two of his neighbors...

Chandra Levy's killer turned out not to be Democratic Congressman Gary Condit, but Ingmar Guandique - an illegal alien from El Salvador, given temporary amnesty by President Bush. (Does that guy have any brothers? I'd love to see another one like him in the White House!). The one Central Park rapist that even liberals admit was guilty was Hispanic Matias Reyes. After the other attackers had finished with the victim, Reyes came across the joggers beaten and bloody body, and raped her himself.

12. ... environmentalists used to care about gridlock, overcrowding, loss of parkland, and exhaustion of natural resources. Not anymore. Today's environmentalists turn a blind eye as 25 million people tramp through delicate ecosystems, set fire to national parks, kill livestock, dump tons of soiled diapers and Pepsi bottles in the desert, and deface ancient Native American sites. Political correctness demands that no one notice immigrants' toll on the environment. ... Of the 77 human-caused fires on federal or tribal land in Arizona between 2006 and 2010 investigated by the GAO, a cause could be determined in 60 cases. Fully half of those were caused by illegal aliens. ...One of the reasons the GAO was able to review only 77 fires was that the BLM and the Forest Service couldn't spare any agents for investigations. They were too busy protecting 'firefighters and their equipment from illegal aliens.' Apparently, when illegals see border patrol agents, they try to distract them by throwing lighted matches in the brush to start fires. Not only do illegal immigrants intentionally set wildfires, but they violently attack firefighters trying to extinguish the blazes. Firies are allowed to rage, because fire crews are forced to wait for law enforcement protection. ... The Forest Service had once gamely suggested trying to identify 'the group most likely to start fires,' but once the evidence was in, they buried it. To blame illegal aliens would be playing the 'blame the perpetrator' game. ... Because of new border restrictions after 9/11 - I guess it was possible to tighten the borders! - our dear friends in Mexico moved their drug cartel operations directly into America's parks. ... 'These guys shoot people'... Armed illegal aliens were in control of our national parks, so government officials leapt to action by shutting down the parks. A majority of Organ Pipe Cactus National Monument was closed to US citizens for more than a decade because it was too dangerous.

... For a glimpse into America's future, consider how Mexicans treat their own environment. In Mexico's most famous national park, a ten-thousand-year-old evergreen forest designated by presidential decree as a biosphere reserve, illegal loggers chop down about seventy mature tress a day... While environmentalists from around the world send millions of dollars to Mexico preserve the forest... For decades, Mexican refuse ended up on San Diego's world-famous beaches by way of the Tijuana River. ... One solution would have been for Mexicans to stop throwing their garbage in the river. ... Instead, US taxpayers funded a sewage treatment plant on the border at a cost of $239.4 million. Mexico chipped in $17 million. ... Where are the environmentalists? For 50 years, they've been carrying on about overpopulation; promoting family planning, birth control... The Sierra Club began sounding the alarm over the country's expanding population in 1965 - the very year Teddy Kennedy's immigration act passed - and in 1978, adopted a resolution expressly asking Congress to 'conduct a thorough examination of US immigration laws.' For a while, the Club taked about almost nothing else. "It is obvious" the Club said two years later, "that the numbers of immigrants the US accepts affects our population size and growth rate," even more than 'the number of children per family.

Over the next three decades, America took in tens of millions of legal immigrants and illegal aliens alike. But suddenly, about ten years ago, the Sierra Cub realized to its embarrassment that importing multiple millions of polluting, fire-setting, littering immigrants is actually fantastic for the environment! The advantages of overpopulation dawned on the Sierra Club right after it received a $100 million donation from hedge fund billionaire David Gelbaum with the express stipulation that - as he told the LA Times - 'if they ever came out anti-immigration, they would never get a dollar from me.' It would be as if someone offered the Catholic Church $100 million to be pro-abortion. But the Sierra Club said: Sure! Did you bring the check? Obviously, there's no reason to listen to them on anything.

... Not only did the Sierra Club never again say another word against immigration, but, in 2004, it went the extra mile, denouncing three actuals environmentalists running for the Club's board, by claiming they were racists who opposed mass immigration. The three 'white supremacists' were Dick Lamm, the three-time Democratic governor of Colorado; Frank Morris, former head of the Black Congressional Caucus Foundation; and Cornell professor David Pimentel, who created the first ecology course at the university... America's premiere hate group, the Southern Poverty Law Center, jumped into the fray, with multimillionaire con man and SPLC head Morris Dees running for the Sierra Club board simply to smear the three real environmentalist candidates... But, evidently, what poor Southerners need most is a massive influx of foreign poor people competing for their jobs. ... In 2012, Sierra Club executive director Michael Brune announced that the Club officially supported mass immigration - amnesty, no borders, more legal immigration, the whole nine yards.

13. Normally, (Carlos) slim is the kind of businessman the (NY) Times - along with every other sentient human being - would find repugnant. Frequently listed as the richest man in the world, Slim acquired his fortune through a corrupt inside deal giving him a monopoly on telecommunications services in Mexico. But in order to make money from his monopoly, Slim needs lots of Mexicans living in the US, sending money to their relatives back in Oaxaca. Otherwise, Mexicans couldn't pay him - and they wouldn't have much need for phone service, either, other than to call in ransom demands. Back in 2004, before the Times became Slim's pimp - a Times article stated: "Clearly... the nation's southern border is under siege." But that was before Carlos Slim saved the Times from bankruptcy. Ten years later, with a border crisis even worse that in 2004, and Latin America pouring across the border, the Times indignantly demanded the Obama "go big" on immigration and give "millions of immigrants permission to stay". ...

Republicans are terrified of saying anything about immigration for fear of being called 'racist.' ... The fact that most immigrants are Hispanic provides excellent cover for the elite's monumental self-interest. Here's a tip for the GOP: Don't talk about the illegal aliens. Talk about Carlos Slim, Talk about rich Americans finding a solution to 'the servant problem.' Talk about one-hit wonder Mark Zuckerberg underpaying his computer programmers while 32 percent of American graduates in STEM fields can't get job and the rest haven't seen their salaries rise for more than a decade. Talk about how Bill Clinton couldn't find someone to be his attorney general because of the prevalence of illegal alien employees in households of the '1 percent'. Determined to appoint a woman attorney general, Clinton kept producing women with illegal alien nannies (Zoe Baird, Kimba Wood). ... The elites just can't grasp that most Americans raise their own kids, make their own beds, cook their own food, and drive their own cars. ... America will be Brazil, with a well-pampered, itty-bitty upper class, amid an ocean of poor people. ... It's a sweet deal the elites have: They get to have cheap nannies and lawn boys in the whitest towns in America - and feel morally superior at the same time!

14. The vast majority of all legal immigrants - two thirds- get in on "family reunification" policies each year. In other words, America has no say about the single largest category of immigrants... Entire villages from Pakistan are dumped on the country, based not on their expertise in nuclear engineering, but because everyone in the village is related to the first guy who got in. If they're not, in the strict sense, related, they'll lie. In 2008, the State Department suspended the family reunification part of the African refugee program because DNA testing showed that only 20 percent of 'family members' were actually related. We'll still take as many refugees from Africa, but they won't have to lie about being related anymore. ... The special agricultural amnesty of 1986 is a good example of how even the most reasonable-sounding immigration law will inevitably be turned into a pipeline for criminals, welfare cases, and terrorists. ... illegal alien farmworkers who could prove they had done seasonal farmwork for a total of ninety days between May 1, 1985 and May 1, 1986, would be granted temporary legal status. what could go wrong? In the first three years of the program, 888,637 agricultural amnesty applications were identified as fraudulent - but only 60,637 of those were denied. Overwhelmed with amnesty applications under just this one provision, the INS found it to be a big time-saver to simply ignore fraud. ... Mohammed Salameh, another terrorist convicted in the 1993 World Trade Center bombing, was also in the US because of Schumer's special agricultural worker amnesty. The unskilled 19-year-old first came to the US on a tourist visa because, as the US consulate later explained, someone in the office "took a chance" on Mohammed. Mohammed not only had never worked on a farm, but he was not even in the country until 1988, two years after the special amnesty became law, though it was explicitly limited to those who had worked on farms in the US in the year before May 1, 1986. By the most basic definition of the law, Mohammed was not eligible, but he was allowed to stay in the US and obtain a work visa - while the INS processed his petition. Moving with the lightning speed of a government agency, the INS rejected his petition for amnesty as a farm worker three years later. Then, Mohammed applied for a general amnesty, claiming he had been living continuously in the US from 1980 to 1986. Actually, he was a teenager in Jordan then, but again, Mohammed was allowed to stay while the INS considered his request. As it considering, Mohammed bombed the World Trade Center.

How about all those brainy, high-tech H-!B immigrants that Senator Orrin Hatch keeps telling us about? ... the cheap-labor advocacy group Partnership for a New American Economy excitedly tweeted that two - yes two - of the five LindedIn founders were "born in Europe"!... Here's my counter tweet: 98.7% fo the founders of important Silicon Valley companies were born in America! 99 percent are white men! ... Professor Norman Matloff: 'The vast majority of H-1B's, including those hired from US universities, are ordinary people doing ordinary work, not the best and the brightest. On the contrary, the average quality of the H-1Bs is lower that theat of the Americans. ... The main advantage of foreign labor over native workers, Matloff explains, is aht H-1B workers are indentured servants: They can't quit without risking deportation. so American employers get to pay less for standard computer programming work. ... They want cheap people. Mass-immigration advocates push ethnic stereotypes about high-IQ immigrants, but then go crazy whenever anyone suggests we actually bring in high-IQ immigrants. ... The average Indian IQ is staggeringly low: 82. That's about the same as the average IQ in Afghanistan - 84; Panama - 84; Dominican Republic - 82; Paraguay - 84; Yemen - 85; and Tonga - 86. We take more immigrants from India than from Austria, Belgium, Denmark, Finland, Greece, Iceland, Ireland, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Sweden, Switzerland, Spain, and the Czech Republic put together. Why are we discriminating...? The answer is: Because those immigrants would tend to fill the kinds of jobs rich people have.

15. The only thing that stands between America and oblivion is a total immigration moratorium. ... It's evident that the government can't be trusted to use three brain cells in admitting immigrants, so its discretion has to be completely revoked. No matter how clearly laws are written, government bureaucrats connive to confer citizenship on people that a majority of Americans would not want to let in as tourists, much less as our fellow citizens. ... No other fix will work. Congress could just insist that immigrants pay taxes, learn English, not collect welfare, and have good moral character, except the problem is: It already has. All those laws were swept away by INS officials, judges, and Democratic administrations. Doing it again won't produce a different result. ... Even if we could trust the government on immigration - and we can't - there are the legions of immigration lawyers, lobbyists, nonprofits, and general miscreants whose single-minded mission is to turn America into the Third World hellhole of liberal fantasies. ... The billion-dollar immigration industry has turned every single aspect of immigration law into an engine of fraud. The family reunifications are frauds, the 'farmworkers' are frauds, the high-tech visas are frauds - and the asylum and refugee cases are monumental frauds. ... the only result of our asylum policies is that we get good liars. Taxpayers subsidize sleazy immigration activists who coach immigrants to lie to immigration officials. Document mills produce phony passports, school records, and medical reports. ... immigration judges approve 92 percent of all "credible fear" asylum applications.
16. ... if Romney had won 71 percent of the Hispanic vote in 2012, instead of 27 percent, he still would have lost. On the other hand, had he won just 4 percent more of the white vote, he would have won.
17. America's suicidal immigration policies are the single biggest threat facing the nation. What happens with immigration will determine whether America continues to exist or becomes a Third World republic...

Mayor Goodman,
I was disappointed to watch you on your KCLV show Friday evening supporting illegal aliens. Worse yet was the inclusion of two guests, both of who were also advocates of illegal aliens. Wouldn't it have been fair to host an equal amount of speakers in opposition? Is the care and feeding of illegal aliens a part of the city charter? I doubt it. We need the illegal immigrants to return to their native countries. Your positions lure more of them here and encourage them to stay. Why don't you start looking out for US citizens first? Don't you realize that the reason people from third world countries sneak into the US is ultimately because they can't stand being around other third world people. Plenty of skilled people from developed countries are waiting patiently for admission to the US. Is it fair to reward those whose very first act into this county is illegal? You can disguise the problem by saying they are fleeing high crime rates, violence, rotten economy... but this deception hides the real reason. Why would you want to turn us into a third world country? If you feel so concerned about them, there is an easy solution: move to a third world country to help them where they are.

Please read:

The Immigration Solution, by MacDonald, Hansen & Malanga

While the cheapness of the immigrants' labor may benefit a very few industries and provide some upper and le-class families with cut-rate gardeners and nannies, it adds very little to our national standard of living. On the other side of the ledger, the costs these immigrants impose on US taxpayers for health care, schooling, welfare, and (all too often) incarceration far outweigh the benefits they offer. In California, the National Academy of Sciences found immigrant families cost each native-born household an additional $1,200 in taxes per year. Although a net loss for the US, such workers are an unalloyed boon for Mexico. Their ability to find work north of the border is an essential safety valve for Mexico's failed economy and stubbornly unreformed political culture, and the remittances these workers send home are indispensable to Mexico, constituting its second largest source of hard currency. No wonder the Mexican government – especially through its consuls in the US – vigorously fosters the illegal migration of its nationals into its northern neighbor. … But those earlier huddled masses of immigrants yearning to breathe free, however tired and poor they may have looked, were in fact on average more skilled than the native-born population of a century ago. In addition, the less-developed economy of that era also had a vastly greater need for immigrants without skills than does today's knowledge economy. More important, the US immigration system of that period was a machine for selecting the most enterprising and energetic migrants. With no welfare system whatever, those who came were those who thought they could make use of the opportunity and freedom America offered by their own efforts. Grateful for the chance, these newcomers were only too glad to assimilate to their new land as best they could, and their children did so wholeheartedly. Not so today. The first child born in America to an immigrant entitles his or her family to child-only welfare payments – a hefty-looking sum to a recent migrants from a peasant village. … Deprived of work, illegals would return home, just as 60 percent of immigrants from the first great migration eventually left these shores when they couldn't make it here. ...our new policy should select newcomers not because they are someone's brother or adult child or elderly parents, or because they successfully sneaked into the country some years ago, but because they have some special skill... that will enrich our nation. … Thousands arrive illegally from Mexico into California each year... They come in such numbers because a tacit alliance of Right and Left has created an open-borders policy, aimed at keeping wage labor cheap and social problems ever fresh, so that the ministrations of Chicano studies professors, La Raza activists, and all the other self-appointed defenders of group causes will never be unneeded. … nearly one quarter of California's inmates are aliens from Mexico. The pro-labor left found that the industrious new arrivals whom it championed eroded the wages of its own domestic low wage constituencies - the Labor Department attributes 50 percent of real-wage declines to the influx of cheap immigrant labor. … when I was ten, in 1963, all suburbanites mowed their own lawns – many with push mowers. Now almost everyone hires the job out. Nannies for toddlers and grannies, unheard of then, are now ubiquitous... Rural schools used to begin in mid-September to ensure that we natives could pick grapes to earn our school clothes and shoes. Today not a single student in California would do such hot, dirty work, now considered demeaning. … So we allow illegal aliens to obtain California driver's licenses – the foundation for all other means of legal identification – and to pay reduced in-state tuition at the University of California, thereby providing several thousand dollars in discounts not available to American citizens from out of state. Whether you break the law to reach California or immigrate legally, it makes little difference in how you drive, send your kids to college, or draw on the public services of the state. … I often suggest to teachers who tell aliens that our culture is racist, exploitative, and sexist that they should live in Mexico themselves to fathom why millions are dying to obtain what they so casually dismiss.

… America does not have a vast labor shortage that requires waves of low wage immigrants to alleviate; in fact, unemployment among native-born unskilled workers in high – consistently about double the nations' overall unemployment rate. … an unusual coalition of business groups, unions, civil rights activists, and church leaders thwarted the call for restrictions with passage of the inaptly names 1986 Immigration Reform and Control Act, which legalized some 2.7 million unauthorized aliens already here, supposedly in exchange for tougher penalties and controls against employers who hired illegals. The law proved no deterrent, however, because supporters, in subsequent legislation and court cases argued on civil rights grounds, weakened the employer sanctions. Meanwhile more illegals flooded here in the hope of future amnesties from Congress, while the newly legalized sneaked their wives and children into the country rather than have them wait for family-preference visas. The flow of illegals into the country rose to between 300,000 and 500,000 per year in the 1990's, so that a decade after the legislation that had supposedly solved the undocumented alien problem by reclassifying them as legal, the number of illegals living in the US was back up to about 5 million. … In many American industries, waves of low-wage workers have also retarded investments that might lead to modernization and efficiency. Farming, which employs a million immigrant laborers in California alone, is the prime case in point. Faced with a labor shortage in the early 1960's, when President Kennedy ended a 22-year-old guest-worker program that allowed 45,000 Mexican farm hands to cross over the border and harvest 2.2 million tons of California tomatoes for processed foods, farmers complained but swiftly automated, adopting a mechanical tomato-picking technology created more than a decade earlier. Today, just 5,000 better-paid workers – one-ninth the original workforce – harvest 12 million tons of tomatoes using the machines. The savings prompted by low-wage migrants may even be minimal in crops not easily mechanized. … If the benefits of the current generation of migrants are small, the costs are large and growing because of America's vast range of social programs and the wide advocacy network that strives to hook low-earning legal and illegal immigrants into these programs. A 1998 Nationals Academy of Sciences study found that more than 30 percent of California's foreign-born were on Medicaid... compared with 14 percent of native –born households. The foreign-born were more than twice as likely as the native-born to be on welfare, and their children were nearly five times as likely to be in means-tested government lunch programs. Native-born households pay for much of this, the study found, because they earn more and pay higher taxes – and are more likely to comply with tax laws. Recent immigrants, by comparison, have much lower levels of income and tax compliance.

... This call for 'human rights' is a clever one, for it hides its radical status in a rhetorical safe harbor. What, exactly, are the 'human rights' that the US is denying illegal aliens? They have unfettered access to free medical care, free education, welfare for their children, free representation in court when they commit crimes, every due process protection during criminal prosecution that the Constitution guarantees citizens and legal immigrants, the shelter of labor laws, and the miracles of modern industrial society like clean water, the control of infectious diseases (including the ones they bring with them), and plumbing. The only putative 'right' they lack - and that, of course, is the 'human right' to which they and their ambassadors refer - is the right to legal status regardless of illegal entry. ....

No one will take the assurance that 'this time we mean business' seriously. If the executive branch is not willing to enforce the current law against violators, a new set of laws will not suddenly strengthen its resolve... border defenses have been fortified over the years, but the drill has been: if you can get past the border patrol, you are home free. The most important action the government could take to end illegal immigration would be to penalize employers that unlawfully hire illegal aliens... After 9/11, the department of Homeland Security deported fifteen hundred illegal Pakistanis. An additional fifteen thousand then left voluntarily, reports Jessica Vaughan of the Center for Immigration Studies. There is no reason to think this enforcement-through-attrition strategy won't work as well for Hispanic illegals. ...

It would be useful for open-borders optimists to spend some time in the Los Angeles Unified School District, which is 73 percent Hispanic, and where just 40 percent of Hispanic students graduate. (Nationwide, 53 percent of Hispanics graduate from high school...) Of those Hispanic students who do graduate, just 22 percent have completed the course work necessary for admission to a four-year state college - which means that of all Hispanic students who enter in ninth grade, fewer than 15 percent will graduate ready for college. Immigrant advocates have fiercely opposed in court a long-deferred California high school exit exam, which would require students to answer just over 50 percent of questions testing eight-grade-level math and ninth-grade-level English. The California Research Bureau predicts that if the exam becomes a reality, Hispanic graduation rates would drop well below 30 percent. ... Schools spend huge sums trying to improve the Hispanic graduation rate, even hiring 'outreach consultants' for dropout prevention. One Santa Ana consultant's approach is predictably multicultural. "We need to teach teachers that students need to be proud of where they are coming from," she told me. But, of course, Hispanic school failure derives not from ethnic neglect - the Sana Ana schools glorify the Hispanic heritage to a fault...
...a high level of immigration translates to increased levels of crime. Between the foreign-born generation and their American children, the incarceration rate of Mexican American jumps more than eightfold...
Pro-amnesty forces promote that illegal immigrants "risk everything for the dream of freedom"... However lousy the Mexican economy, there are few, if any, political freedoms enjoyed by Americans that Mexico denies. It is the Yankee dollar, not untasted freedom, that brings the vast majority of illegals here.

...in spring 2006 American witnessed millions of illegal aliens who not only were unapologetic about their illegal status but were demanding that their hosts accommodate their own political grievances, from providing driver's licenses to full amnesty. The largest demonstrations - held on May Day, with thousands of protesters waving Mexican flags and bearing placards depicting the Communist insurrectionist Che Guevara - only confirmed to most Americans that illegal immigration was out of control and beginning to become politicized along the lines of Latin American radicalism. I chronicled in Mexifornia the anomaly of angry protesters waving he flag of the country they vehemently did not wish to return to , but now the evening news beamed these images to millions. In short, the radical socialism of Latin America, seething in the angry millions who flocked to support Venezuela's Hugo Chavez, Bolivia's Evo Morales, and Mexico's Andres Lopez Obrador, had now seemingly been imported into our own largest cities. ...

Crippled America

We are the only nation in the world whose immigration system places the needs of other nations ahead of our own. … Too many people have forgotten the Mariel boatlift. … The Mexican government has published pamphlets explaining how to illegally emigrate to the US. … It's a great way for those governments to get rid of their worst people without paying any price.... Operation Wetback... was successful. It was a joint effort between the INS and the Mexican government. Special immigration teams were created to quickly process and deport illegal immigrants. One of the reasons it worked is that people who were caught were given to Mexican government agents, who moved them into central Mexico, where they could find jobs. ...In the first year, more than one million people were sent back. ...Why should we absorb the expense of keeping criminals in prisons? Let their countries of origin deal with the problems they sent us. If they refuse to take them back, we can stop issuing visas to those countries, preventing their citizens from legally visiting the US. I also would triple the number of immigration officers we currently employ until the wall is built. … Currently there are about 5,000 officers attempting to enforce the existing immigration laws against the more than 11 million illegal aliens. Compare that to the... 35,000 officers in the New York Police Department. Since 9/11 we have tripled the size of the border patrol but haven't substantially increased the number of ICE officers – the officers who enforce immigration laws. … We have to cut off federal grants to sanctury cities... We need to have real penalties for people who overstay their visas. … Most important is ending or curtailing so-called birthright citizenship, or anchor babies. … It is estimated that about 300,000 of these children are born here annually. That's 300,000 children who are entitled to all the rights and privileges granted to American citizens because their mothers entered this country illegally... There are businesses that specialize in making this happen! They call it 'birth tourism'…. And those people take advantage of the system and come here illegally should never enjoy the benefits of being a resident – or citizen – of this nation. So, I am against any path to citizenship for undocumented workers or anyone else who is in this country illegally. They should – and need to – go home and get in line. And you know who agrees with me? The Mexicans, the Chinese, and all the people from other countries who want to be here legally and can't get a visa or fit into a quota... We can be generous and do all of this humanely. But the security and prosperity of American citizens have to come first. .. (Chapter 3)

I believe in putting the needs of American citizens first, always.... There's an old phrase that, sadly, you rarely hear anymore, "Made in America". We will start saying this again. (Chap. 10)

Friends and Colleagues,
This week we welcome another very important senior member to our team -- Parvesh Kumar, MD. As professor and chair of the department of radiation oncology, cancer program director, and senior associate dean for clinical research, Dr. Kumar will be in charge of the medical school's research efforts and cancer program. He's an outstanding radiation oncologist with a strong national reputation for building academic radiation oncology departments and cancer research programs.

As the lead of our research team, Dr. Kumar will help the medical school build quality programs in cancer, behavioral health and addiction, neuroscience, orthopedics, and develop the infrastructure for clinical and translational research.

Clinical research is direct research on patients and includes clinical trials of new drugs and therapies. Basic research leads to information on the causes of diseases and usually involves laboratory research. Translational research connects the basic to the clinical research, it is the in-between step, also referred to as "bench to bedside" research. In diabetes, for instance, it might be the development of a new insulin pump that needs to be tested with patients to ensure it works. In cancer, it might be the testing of a new drug in animal models and then working out the dosing to begin the first clinical trials in humans.

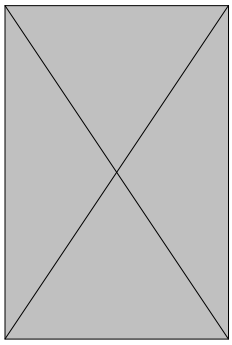
Dr. Kumar will be setting up several different research and clinical programs necessary to bring a variety of National Institute of Health (NIH) funded research projects to Nevada. NIH funds a variety of federal research grants. Our goal over the next 10 years is to receive approximately $50 million in externally funded research. Ultimately, we want to pursue becoming a National Cancer Institute (NCI)-designated cancer center. The first step to develop a 15-year plan for growth of the program, present the application to an internal UNLV committee for approval, and then to the Board of Regents for final approval of the center. This process will take about six months, to actually achieve NCI-designation will take at least 15 years.

I'm extremely confident in Dr. Kumar's abilities and expertise. I recruited him to the University of Kansas (KU) School of Medicine in 2010 as the associate director of clinical research for the University of Kansas Cancer Center. Dr. Kumar was key in helping KU become the 66th NCI-designated cancer center in the nation two years later. He also was recruited as the chair of radiation oncology where he grew the radiation oncology faculty from four to 27, the radiation oncology facilities from one to seven to increase access to clinical trials and patient care, and total patient consultations tripled from about 1,000 to over 3,000 per year.

Prior to joining KU, his alma mater, Dr. Kumar had been the founding chair of the department of radiation oncology at the Robert Wood Johnson School of Medicine (RWJMS) in New Jersey, where he also served as the associate director of radiation oncology for the Cancer Institute of New Jersey at RWJMS. I first met him in 2004 when I took a trip to Los Angeles to meet alumni of the University of Kansas School of Medicine. At that time he was the new chair of the department of radiation oncology at the University of Southern California (USC) Keck School of Medicine and the USC Norris Comprehensive Cancer Center, but the first thing I asked him was whether he wanted to come back to his alma mater, KU. At the time he didn't, but later on as we were recruiting again, he came to Kansas. Now I'm happy to say he's in Las Vegas to build amazing research and cancer programs.

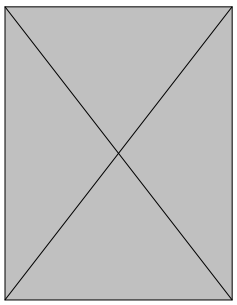
Best wishes,

Barbara



Community Advisory Board Spotlight

Meet Ikram U. Khan, MD., president and partner of Quality Care Consultants, LLC. The company provides consultant services in health care strategy and policy development for employers and other health care organizations. "Having been engaged in a dialogue with state leadership in Carson City for over two decades, for the creation of a Las Vegas-based medical school, for me, this is a dream come true," says Dr. Khan. "Southern Nevada has an acute shortage of physicians. This medical school will go a long way in providing physicians in Southern Nevada to serve the growing needs of our citizens. It has been a privilege to be a UNLV School of Medicine Community Advisory Board member. The medical school at UNLV is long overdue. I commend the Governor and State Legislators for approving the funding for the school," added Dr. Khan.



Founding Student Scholarship Donor

Rick and Jeri Crawford are supporting one of the 135 UNLV School of Medicine Founding Scholarships. The Jeri S. and Richard T. Crawford Scholarship will provide a full four-year tuition scholarship to one of the 60 medical students entering the charter class of the UNLV School of Medicine in 2017. "We sponsored a scholarship because we are passionate about enriching our community by empowering students and supporting their education. The UNLV School of Medicine will provide students with the tools needed to make a positive impact on lives and communities," said Jeri.

EXPERT ANALYSIS

Officials Must Note Financial Conflict Of Interest Law

The director of the U.S. Centers for Disease Control was forced to resign earlier this year after her investment manager purchased stock in tobacco and pharmaceutical companies on her behalf, creating a conflict of interest with her official role. The incident highlights how important it is for public officials to understand the conflict of interest statute and structure their investment arrangements accordingly, say attorneys with WilmerHale. Self-Policing Animal Research: Another Bad Idea From USDA

When Congress passed the Animal Welfare Act in 1966, it stressed the law was needed because of “the shocking failure of self-policing” by the animal experimentation industry. Subject: child support order recieved in mail and your office protecting a criminal using the family system to commit fraud and criminal offenses

Dear Mr. Steve Wolfson< District Attorney;

I Peter Deiana in proper person, refuse from this day forward to be bullied, threatened and treated with such a disgusting disregard to my civil and constitutional rights by your office, the family court system as a whole and the attorneys that continuously get well compensated for openly helping their clients that have the financial means to hire these dirtbags commit serious offenses; criminal offenses and hide them from prosecution under the cover of the family courts. Now this isn't true for all litigants; It stands true if you are of the female sex you very easily can get away with serious serious criminal offenses, offenses that carry felony d and worse charges! In my particular cases (plural) the justice system we know as family courts has failed me twice. completely ruined my life to where i've contemplated taking my own life. both these women have committed serious criminal offenses against myself your office and the courts. I have more than enough proof; I have presented my obligation of proof in the first case with Rebecca Deiana, Stiltz, and whatever she has changed her name to now, Hinkle I believe. Multiple jurisdictions multiple courts multiple child support offices multiple counties and states and always the legal system fails to take responsibility and do what they are obligated to do.... RIGHT THE WRONGS AND PUNISH THE CRIMINALS> It has been shown to me over and over again that the judges that have been elected to their benches fail us as men over and over and over again because it is much easier for them to continue their careers under the cover of "the norm and acceptable" then to take a stand and risk the persecution by their piers then to believe that the things that I and i'm sure 1000's o other men have accused these women of doing; THAT IN FACT THESE WOMEN ARE VERY CAPABLE OF COMMITTING THESE GROSS AND COMPLETE LACKING OF REMORSE AND MORAL STANDARDS IF ANY STANDARDS AT ALL!!! Somebody needs to take a stand and change your spineless practices and start prosecuting these women and judges and attorneys that are ruining; completely ruining countless lives day in and day out and at day end never giving them another thought as the add to our homeless, add to our drug addiction epidemic, add to the horrible rise in suicides and worse of all add the number of children that grow up without a father, when the father wanted nothing more than to be a father to that child and the growing number of our youth that are suffering from mental instability issues handed down from you officials showing total disregard to the long term consequences of your actions. When did we stop caring about what was right and wrong and right in front of our faces and start ruining lives because this book says here says such and such is the only scenario possible and this party should always be given no doubt to the statements being true. Over the last six to seven months I have studied so much on family law and scenarios that are documented as case study and opinions and turned into the bible on how to deal with certain offenses, to the point that nobody has to think nobody has to use common sense just open the book and the book will cast a shadow on the offending party and on with the ruining of lives we go. so much studying it literally made me sick to see how many regulations and statues as case studies and laws where written and published being completely sexiest and against the man from beginning to end. That is what got us here today, it started a movement by these women that should be stripped of their parental rights for doing these acts toward and directly affecting the innocent children the family courts says they act in the best interest of. Completely not A TRUE STATEMENT ON THE COURTS PART. iF i CAN TAKE THE N.R.S THAT EXPRESSES HOW THE SYSTEM SHOULD COME TO THEIR CONCLUSION ON THE BEST INTEREST OF CHILD, AND I can with out a doubt that these women especially Ashley have violated ever one of the regulating factors of these guidelines and ultimately gets ignored and swept aside by rebuttals of complete lies false allegations and perjury and all out fraud. Well I am going to be making that stand myself!!! I WILL NOT GO ALONG WITH EITHER COURT ORDER OF SUPPORT FROM THIS DAY FORWARD. Instead I will be continuing this front against both parties, the courts and the lawyers at fault for letting these behaviors and actions continue on without consequence but with out a doubt is ruining countless amounts of lives day in and day out. This needs to change. I have written a great number of emails to a great number of agencies and offices about the specifics of my current case or onset of false allegations, false police reports, crimes against my person and crimes against public, perjury, fraud upon the courts, fraudulently presenting herself as a victim of specific domestic violence acts that she Ashley, actually committed against myself in the direct presence of my children, child abduction and serious onset of alienation.Alienation of affection; a multiple year onslot of alienation delivered by my wifes mother directly and personally. And more, all provable, most are very obvious. obvious and very provable case of multi state criminal conspiracy involving a minimum of 5 individuals which includes but not limited to false testimonies/willingness to provide false testimonies, to do with false criminal allegations to gain imprisonment of myself and judgements in my wife's favor. including my wife's attorney, her brother her mother her father her friend and our babysitter Jamie Houston resident of enterprise, southern highlands in southern las vegas and runs a day care that is past legal capacity on most days in reference to license, employees, space and number of children. Her brother Rob Mcclelland resides in albuquerque new mexico, Mother and father Kathi and Bob McClelland from Tucumcari, new mexico and own 2 pharmacys and is currently under their second serious investigation by the pharmacy board for illegal practices and distributions of controlled and dangerous drugs. It should be known I am a main witness and have provided a great deal of evidence in this case with the pharmacy board of new mexico and these people know this to be true and I propose a threat to their fraudulent and illegal lifestyle. Attorney is Gary Zernich and is very privy to all this information and knows it to be true and has taken a personal interest toward destroying my character and continues to help his client in her hidden and illegal agendas. Now know all these statements to be very true and that I do hold evidence and proof to all accusations i have made in this statement and all others I have written and will continuously write and distribute thru out until Justice; true justice prevails. And I will take this to the upper courts and will continue to insist somebody of authority stands up and takes charge and these individuals are rightfully charged and prosecuted with the criminal charges they deserve and my children are reunited with me and my civil, personal and constitutional rights are no longer being violated. I will not tolerate being illegally and fraudulently being stripped of my rights to a father/child relationship for 6-7 months now; completely denied over 600 attempts at visitation will also being abused under the cover of the family courts. And I definitely will not fund these women's fraudulent and illegal activities with $1600.00 a month in judgements against me. I havent made $1600.00 a month in at least the last 3 months!!!! and recently find myself unemployed. Even though my wifes reward from success in her agendas against me is becoming a million aire (no longer cut off from family money and inheratances by her mother) I will have no argument to taking care of my responsibilities but not under these circumstances. I will prevail in complete reversals in both cases. If you feel that it proves a point or somehow helps or fixes anything by putting me in jail, then so be it. I will add wrongful imprisonment to the fight and will immediately continue my fights for justice against the unbelievable actions of these women the second and every time I am released.

Thank you in advance,
Pete Deiana

Living in a U-Haul. Taking care of her younger sister. Watching her parents struggle with addiction. Preventing Teen Drug and Alcohol Abuse Starts with a Good Parent-Child Relationship

The key to preventing drug and alcohol abuse in the teen years is maintaining a healthy and open relationship with a child in the preteen years, according to an Iowa State University and University of California, Davis, study. Researchers found that parents who had built a strong relationship with their child in middle and late childhood were more likely to know what was going on with their teens and their friends -- and more able to divert them from pathways that often lead to substance abuse.

Las Vegas Municipal Court Celebrates HOPE Court Graduates

A Program Designed to Give a Second Chance to Habitual Offenders

On Tuesday, July 21, 2015, at 2:00 p.m., Judge Heidi Almase, Las Vegas Municipal Court, will celebrate the successful graduation of four participants of the Habitual Offender Prevention and Education (HOPE) Court program. The graduation ceremony and reception will be held in Courtroom 5C at the Regional Justice Center, 200 E. Lewis Avenue, Las Vegas, Nevada 89102.

HOPE Court is an alternative sentencing program designed to give a second chance to habitual offenders suffering from addiction. The program includes housing and job assistance and requires the participants to complete drug treatment and aftercare programs. Every participant is also required to stay out of trouble and abstain from drugs and alcohol use during the program.

Graduate Tracy Horne entered the HOPE Court program on February 2, 2014, after her 14th arrest in the City of Las Vegas. Ms. Horne completed a rigorous schedule of intensive outpatient and individual counseling while obtaining fulltime employment. Ms. Horne has become accomplished at budgeting and financial management and plans to pursue a degree in the culinary arts. Ms. Horne will complete the program with nearly 18 months of continuous recovery.

Graduate David Moses entered the HOPE Court program on January 28, 2014, after his 8th arrest in the City of Las Vegas. Mr. Moses also completed a rigorous schedule of intensive outpatient and individual counseling while obtaining fulltime employment. Mr. Moses has maintained independent living status in his own residence for over one year and will complete the HOPE Program with over one year of continuous recovery.

Graduate Martin Randall entered the HOPE Court program on November 19, 2013, after his 124th arrest. Mr. Randall completed an inpatient treatment program followed by a rigorous schedule of intensive outpatient and individual counseling. Mr. Randall has obtained fulltime employment in addition to independent living status for nearly one year. Mr. Randall will complete the program with nearly twenty months of continuous recovery.

Graduate Calvin White entered the HOPE Court program on October 22, 2013, after his 63rd arrest. Mr. White completed an inpatient treatment program followed by a rigorous schedule of intensive outpatient and individual counseling. Mr. White has regained custody of his daughter and grand-daughter and maintained full time employment as well as independent living. Mr. White will complete the HOPE Program with nearly twenty-one months of continuous recovery.

Subject: RE: Fireworks!

My office staff will continue to follow up and investigate why a ban hasn't occurred before. All that I have discovered is that to date there has not been an appetite for banning fireworks (though most forms of them have been banned and are illegal). At this moment the fierce electrical storm in the area is even worse and of course not controllable at all…ban or laws! It is sending my pets into total panic mode seeking miniscule hiding places, digging into corners and trying to squeeze into the tiny spaces wherever they can find them.

Mayor Goodman,
Thank you for your reply to my last email. It means a great deal to me to know that I wasn't writing in vain, although knowing that you and your beloved pets too have suffered and continue to suffer, doesn't make me any happier.
Your description of your own neighborhood over the years just confirms my own belief that the only solution is to implement a ban on fireworks in city neighborhoods. It has been done in many other cities as I have discovered via the Internet. I can only assume that you or our city and state representatives would know how to go about putting a ban in place. I only know how to teach and play the cello.
This is an excerpt from an article I read concerning the banning of fireworks:

"Fireworks are a symbol of freedom for many, but for others they are a nuisance. The latter sentiment seems to be an increasingly dominant perspective.

A bevy of Washington communities have banned fireworks, with a considerable number around Puget Sound in recent years. There was a string of bans in the '90s when Seattle, Bellevue, Everett and Redmond were among many to nix the tradition. In 2005, cities such as Des Moines and Renton approved their own bans. Bellingham put a ban into place in 2014. One-by-one over the past couple decades, Puget Sound area communities have voted to rid their towns of the explosives.

Marysville and Brier are among the most recent cities to approve bans. This Fourth of July will be the last year residents are allowed to legally set off fireworks in either cities. Bans take effect in 2017."

I can see no other solution, Mayor Goodman. I realize nothing can be done this 4th of July, but surely by July 4th, 2017 isn't it possible we could do what some of the Washington communities are doing? Isn't the fact that we are a drought stricken state enough reason to implement a ban? Although I believe the simple fact they disturb the peace and frighten to death our pets is sufficient reason to consider the ban.

Thank you again for your email.
Respectfully,

Barbara Gurley

They have come either from our neighborhood, adjacent neighborhoods and even set off by traveling vehicles. All except the fewest ARE illegal and try though we have to get them stopped, one at a time or groups of them, new people replace previous occupants, and kids forever joyride through the streets nearby or in hearing range. Solutions? Just what you have done, for there is little else unless you have the specific address of the persons that can be cited and penalized.

Subject: Fireworks!

Happy Fourth of July! Last night, Friday, June 23rd, the fireworks started around 5:00pm. I left my house for about 2 hours and when I returned, the "booms" continued. I finally called the non emergency police number around 9:00 pm to report the fireworks. The dispatcher informed me that they had already received a call about the area I mentioned and a patrol car had been sent out. She also told me that they hate this time of the year for this very reason. She even thanked me for my efforts to try and get this nonsense stopped. I had to give my little dog drugs last night and because of his trembling and barking, I got very little sleep. Today I have to teach private music lessons. I don't have the luxury of sleeping all day like those who were shooting off the fireworks do, no doubt.
We have over a week before the actual 4th celebration. I'm already exhausted. This will continue throughout the week because I am quite sure Las Vegas doesn't have the necessary police officers to patrol these neighborhoods for idiots who can't curb their enthusiasm for using these illegal fireworks in our city neighborhoods. A ban should be implemented on ALL fireworks in neighborhoods. But because you say you cannot do that, your police force will be answering calls all week from residents who, like me, just want to live in peace. We are the ones who work and pay taxes.
I wish I could redirect these fireworks to your neighborhood so you could experience what others have to endure. Maybe after a few sleepless nights you might find the motivation to ban fireworks in all city neighborhoods!
Respectfully,
Barbara Gurley
